The Lindbergh Child
Only Wet Gestures
Talk Peace, Fight Hard
Pity the Hotel Keeper

—By Arthur Brisbane—

EVERY HUMAN BEING in this country, and hundreds of millions the world over, sympathize most deeply today with the bereaved mother and father of the Lindbergh child, cruelly kidnaped.

There are no words that can express the horror of such a crime. It is a dreadful thought that every child, and all fathers and mothers, are exposed to such danger.

Everything will be done that detective skill and world-wide publicity can accomplish.

There is, fortunately, every reason to hope that the missing child will be restored to the arms of its mother.

The police, state and local, in New Jersey are competent, earnest men, and will have the cooperation of every citizen in their search for the child, which in all probability is at this moment not far from the home of its father and mother.

Certain indications point to the belief that the kidnaping, while planned in advance, as the ladder would indicate, was to some extent a matter of sudden impulse, and not the work of habitual criminals.

It is quite possible, which should comfort the family, that the kidnaper or kidnapers will soon return the child of their own free will. They realize that their only hope of escape from punishment lies in restoring the child unharmed to its home, supplying such information as will enable the parents to locate the child and assure its prompt recovery.

Whoever they may be, the kidnapers are solemnly warned that no other course will save them from the fullest punishment for their atrocious and shamful crime. It is not too late for them to undo the most serious consequences for themselves, although they cannot wipe out the dreadful sorrow and suffering that they have inflicted upon the child's father and mother.

With that father and mother the whole world sympathizes. Every American wishes that he could help them in this hour of fearful anxiety.

This newspaper expresses here the earnest sympathy of its many readers.

The House Wets have succeeded in gathering 145 wet votes and will force a vote on resubmission of the Eighteenth Amendment One of the 145 votes was brought to the House in a wheel chair. That is called "one wet victory" although it doesn't mean anything. Both branches of Congress are dry, politically.

The State of Rhode Island has passed a bill repealing the state enforcement act and "legalizing" beer containing 3.75 per cent alcohol. Gov. Case signed the bill yesterday.

That also doesn't mean much. If you make, transport, buy, sell, drink 3.75 beer in Rhode Island, state authorities will not disturb you.

But United States authorities WILL disturb you. The wet is not helped when the state says "you may" if the national government says "you must not." And the national government will continue to say that for some time after March, 1933.

Japan with a polite smile accepts the League of Nations' plan for a pleasant discussion of ways to end hostilities, also agreeing with China on a "temporary truce." That's in one part of the news. The other part of the news is headed "Japanese storm whole line. Chinese give way, fighting in dogged retreat. Mines imperil Japanese flagship." In other words, while talking peace they are fighting more savagely than ever.

Whatever else prohibition may have done, or not done, it has certainly convinced hotel men that they are in the wrong business. One New York hotel that was making a profit of $800,000 a year a few years ago is now in the hands of a receiver. Another big hotel lost a million dollars last year, and another lost $1,200,000. It would interest the income tax department to see what has happened to income taxes formerly paid by corporations operating hotels. There will be no income from that source in 1931 or 1932.

Congressman William Irving Sirovich, of New York, says modern critics "ruin the legitimate theater by destructive criticism." Critics reply that Congressman Sirovich wrote an inferior play, the critics said so, and this annoyed him.

Mr. Sirovich's play may have been bad, none the less, much modern criticism seems written primarily to prove what a smart little boy the dramatic critic is, and not written to help the theater by offering constructive suggestions to managers, playwrights and actors.

BULLETIN

Newark, N. J., March 2 (AP)—A post card was mailed to Col. Charles A Lindbergh from here today reading: "Babe safe. Instructions later. Act accordingly."

Hopewell, N. J., March 2 (INS)—Col. and Mrs Charles A. Lindbergh, famous parents of kidnaped "Lindy, Junior," are willing to pay the $50,000 ransom demanded by those who stole their son, who is ill with a heavy cold and in danger of death from exposure as well as at the hands of his kidnapers.

The willingness of the Lindberghs to pay the sum demanded as well as the fact that a ransom note was actually left in the nursery of Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr., by the kidnapers was disclosed today.

It was learned during a day of fruitless search for the helpless baby that a note found pinned to the sill of the window through which the baby was taken from its sick bed by the kidnapers made a definite ransom demand.

It also threatened harm to the child if the money were not paid, if the contents of the note were divulged, or if the method of payment suggested in the note were revealed.

Capt. John J. Lamb, in charge of the New Jersey state police detail working on the case, said:

"Harm would inevitably come to both the police case and to the child if the conditions laid down in the note were not followed. And I am advising Colonel Lindbergh and Mrs. Lindbergh to carry out the conditions of the letter."

So threatening was the note that for hours its very existence was denied by police investigating the crime.

It finally was determined with absolute definiteness, however, that the ransom demand had been made and that Col. Lindbergh had decided to meet any demand if by so doing he could get his baby back.

No one would say how large the demand was but a report

GUARD KEPT OVER SISTER

Copyright, 1932, by the Boston Evening American.

Northampton, March 2—Constance Morrow, Smith College student and aunt of the kidnaped Lindbergh baby, has been under state police guard for two weeks because of threats against both her and the child, it was learned today.

This was divulged by a friend of Mrs. Dwight Morrow wh said the latter came here secretly two weeks ago to arrange for the police guard for her daughter.

The letters, threatening kidnaping of the baby or Constance, were received in the Lindbergh home in New Jersey, according to Mrs. Morrow's friend.

Two guards were assigned to Constance constantly, as a result of Mrs. Morrow's visit, the informant asserted.

Constance while at Milton Academy was threatened with kidnaping and long investigation, during which she was continually under guard of private detectives, failed to result in any arrests.

Dwight Morrow, Jr., her brother, who is a student at Amherst, remarked to a friend, when informed of the kidnaping of Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr., that "such a thing might have been expected to happen."

It is believed he may have referred to the threats which brought his mother here to arrange for the shielding of Constance.

With sobs choking her voice, Constance, who is 18, talked by telephone today with a Boston Evening American reporter, while her guard paced to and fro outside Dewey House, her college dormitory.

"I don't know what to say," she said. "It was a terrible thing to do. The poor baby. I only know that he's gone They just

Japs Have What They Want; So Will Quit

Geneva, March 2 (INS)—Japanese troops have been ordered to cease hostilities in Shanghai, Naotake Sato, Japanese delegate, informed President Joseph Paul-Boncour of the League of Nations council today.

The order was given, Sato declared, because the Japanese offensive had driven the Chinese 12.4 miles from the International Settlement in Shanghai.

Chinese Driven Back Near to Line Japs Ordered

By DIXON HOSTE.

International News Service Staff Correspondent

Shanghai, March 3, Thursday, 2:15 a. m. (INS)—The Chinese army continued its retreat all along the line from Chapei to a point north of Kiangwan today.

Japanese forces drove steadily westward, pushing the Chinese 12.4 miles from the borders of the International Settlement. That is the limit to which the Japanese demanded the Chinese retire before fighting should cease.

Shortly after midnight the Chapei district appeared to have been completely cleared of Chinese troops and Japanese soldiers took over their vacated posts in the wrecked area.

Because of his success in his two previous robberies in which he nad obtained $400, three detectives were hidden last night in the place.

A Heartbroken Mother's Appeal to Kidnaper

Hopewell, N. J., March 2 (AP)—To the kidnaper of the Lindbergh baby:

The baby has been sick and its recovery may depend on the treatment it gets from you. You must be especially careful about the diet.

Mrs. Lindbergh issued to the press today the strict diet she has been following since the baby fell ill. She did this in the hope you might read this story and that there was some spark of humanity even in the heart of a baby thief.

One quart of milk during the day.

Three tablespoons of cooked cereal morning and night.

Two tablespoons of stewed fruit daily.

Half a cup of orange juice on waking.

Half a cup of prune juice after the afternoon nap.

That's all, kidnaper of the Lindbergh baby. That's what the baby's mother wants you to give the boy. Please do as she requests.

REAR OF LINDBERGH HOME

The official "case history" of the kidnaping of 20-months-old Charles Augustus Lindbergh, son of the noted aviator, was given out today by Maj. Charles F. Stoeffel, assistant superin-endent of New Jersey State police. Speaking for Col. Lind-ergh, Maj. Stoeffel said: "Miss Betty Gow, nursemaid in the indbergh home for the past year, put the child to sleep in his ib in the nursery on the second floor. She left him, asleep, d went downstairs to her supper about 8 o'clock. At 10 'clock, upon returning to the nursery, Miss Gow found the child was missing. Col. Lindbergh telephoned State police headquarters in Trenton and news of the kidnaping was flashed throughout New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York and Delaware. There are two windows in the nursery, both on the east side. The baby was carried out of one of these two windows. This window was warped, and it was impossible to fasten the shutters on it. There were dirt marks on the window sill, and also upon the floor at the edge of the carpet. There were the prints of a ladder on the ground outside the window, and the ladder itself—a crude affair, apparently hastily constructed and not belonging to the Lindbergh estate—was found some distance away. Beside the imprint of the ladder was the mark of a man's foot. He either was in his stocking feet, or had drawn a pair of heavy socks over his shoes—probably the latter, to deaden whatever noise his footsteps might otherwise have made. The man's footprints lead from beneath the window to the point at which the ladder was found—about 50 feet from the house. There they turn toward the Hopewell road, and are joined by another set of footprints, those of a woman. We succeeded in following this trail for more than two miles through woods and fields toward the Hopewell road. Then we lost it on a stretch of rocky ground. Col. Lindbergh tells me the kidnapers apparently took the little boy without even wrapping him in a blanket. Miss Gow, at the colonel's request, checked the blankets in the crib and found none was missing." CLUES ARE FEW IN HUNT FOR BABY STEALERS

PAY ANYTHING, PARENTS' CRY

The reticence of the distraught parents of Baby Lindbergh concerning the presence of the note which had been reported previously without confirmation was attributed to the anxiety of both the colonel and Mrs. Lindbergh, who is to become a mother again this spring, to please the kidnapers—pay any amount—do anything—if they could only get their child back safe and sound.

This anxiety was further heightened by the condition of the child when he was snatched from his nursery crib and hustled into the chill of night clad only in his sleeping suit.

"He will suffer because the poor child has had a cold," said Mrs. Lindbergh plaintively. "We have been doctoring the baby for several days."

The intellectual poise of the former Anne Morrow, the poetess, the fearlessness she has displayed in daring flights with her husband, were shattered by the vision of her only child shivering somewhere along a wind-swept road.

Pay anything and get him back, that was the Lindbergh decision.

Police spread today through the wild country surrounding the Lindbergh estate, up over Sourland Hill and into the dense tangle around Devil's Cave and Roaring Rocks, an isolated region which rumor says is inhabited by numerous moonshiners.

Close watch was kept at eastern airports but nothing was xpected from this as no one believed the kidnapers would be so oolhardy as to attempt to secure transportation on a transport lane while the whole country was looking for the missing child.

THESE FACTS STAND OUT

As each clue in a frantic hunt today proved futile, these facts m largely out of the circumstances surrounding the kidnaping Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr.:

HE ALSO had established the nurse's habit of put-g the child to bed around 7 p. m.*

HE ALSO, possibly, had deliberately fixed the creen outside the nursery window so that it would not asten.*

In view of these facts the chief kidnaper possibilities at the oment seem to be a former worker in construction of the home, or a relative of a worker, or a relative or acquaintance of the indbergh servants, who had visited the estate and studied its opography so as to pick the best approach to the home at night.

In any case, the kidnaper must have spent many vigils near e home before opportunity for the kidnaping occurred, and thus must have lived near the scene, at least within 20 or 30 miles, ossibly westward in Pennsylvania.

TRAPPER SAYS ONE MAN DID IT

Untrained in convention police methods, but wise in woodlore, Oscar Bush, veteran trapper neighbor of Col. Lindbergh, has decided the Lindbergh baby was kidnaped by one man, and not by one or more men and a woman as detectives believed.

Called in by Col. Lindbergh, Bush made a careful study of the grounds and gave his report.

He took as a premise reports of neighbors that late last night an automobile turned into a lane near the Lindbergh estate and then turned off its headlights.

That lane skirts a tangled patch of undergrowth which extends to within about 100 yards of the Lindbergh house.

According to Bush's theory the kidnaper pulled from the tonneau the three sections of his home-made ladder. After removing his shoes he then penetrated the bush with his clumsy burden and forged toward his objective, the crackling of trampled bushes covered by the moaning March wind.

Dragging his ladder across the muddy expanse destined to be the Lindbergh lawn, he assembled the ladder and placed it against the nursery window. A moment later he was scuttling through the dark with his tiny victim.

WOMEN'S FROCKS OLD?

Returning to the house he took down the ladder and dragging it to the nearby thicket tossed it in. There it was found this morning.

Detectives who first examined the grounds decided from footprints they found that a woman was a member of the party and that there were probably two men.

But Bush, accustomed to follow the faint tracks of animals through the woods, said the print of a woman's shoe was old, and that all the larger prints were made by one pair of feet.

FIND CLUE IN PHILADELPHIA

As every available policeman and detective in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York and Delaware sought a trace of the missing million-dollar baby, a promising clue was reported from Philadelphia.

Authorities of the Quaker City reported that a mysterious taxicab was seen at dawn with a heavy-set man and a woman clasping a child within the machine.

A fine-tooth combing of the wooded area around the isolated Lindbergh home here today unearthed a chisel which was believed to have been carried by the kidnapers to "jimmy" the upper-story nursery window if necessary.

The tenseness in the Lindbergh household was further tautened when a fire siren at the town headquarters screeched at a report that there was a fire in the home.

While state troopers searched every inch of woods in the vicinity, Capt. J. J. Lamb in command of the state police detail on the Lindbergh estate reconstructed, in theory, the manner in which the kidnapers had worked.

ANNE EXPECTS SECOND CHILD

The collapsible ladder believed used by the kidnapers was fitted together and placed against the wall under the window of the nursery. (Telephoto of ladders on Page 2.)

Mrs. Anne Lindbergh, mother of the kidnaped child, and who expects another child this spring, pressed her face against the window-pane and watched the procedure. Her features were drawn and wan after a sleepless night. It was said she was under the care of a family physician.

Mrs. Lindbergh, striving to maintain her self-control with marked effort, told Patrolman Charles E. Williamson of the Hopewell police about the child's illness. She said he has been under treatment for several days.

Williamson's search of the nursery—he was the first officer to reach the Lindbergh estate following news of the abduction—revealed that no blankets had been taken, lending substance to Mrs. Lindbergh's fears that the child was taken away improperly clad.

GREAT MAN HUNT IS ON

Williamson quoted Col. Lindbergh as saying:

"It was very windy outside during the early evening, and the noise of the wind could very easily have blanketed strange sounds that at another time would have been heard.

The most extensive man hunt in the nation's history was on today for the kidnapers of the little heir of the flying Lindberghs —the blond, chubby-cheeked Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr.

The baby was taken last night from his crib in the second-floor nursery of the Charles A. Lindbergh estate—five miles back in the Sourland Hill country, as lonesome as a solo flight from New York to Paris—and there has been no trace of him.

The forces of the law in three states mobilized by hundreds at dawn today to track down the kidnapers of the 20-month-old baby—one of the most famous infants of christendom.

There were clues, but the trail was vague. At least one of the kidnapers was a woman. Footprints told officers that. One of the men—there was one man and perhaps more—was in his stocking feet, or wore mocassins. There was mud on the sill of the nursery window. There was a three-piece ladder, mutely explanatory of the method by which the kidnapers reached the sleeping child. There were tracks leading a considerable distance and then being lost as the kidnapers apparently got into a waiting automobile.

Kelly is fingerprint expert attached to the Morristown police station. After descending he declined to tell reporters if he had found anything of value, but a shake of his head to a superior officer was interpreted as indicating that his hunt had been fruitless.

The ladder was left leaning against the window, like a crooked finger pointing at the scene of the shameful crime.

Occasionally one detective or another, moving slowly as though in concentrated thought, would climb laboriously to the top, pause for a momentary scrutiny, and then climb carefully into the nursery.

The lean colonel, who dared death along the uncharted New York-Paris airway with silent calm, appeared numbed by the catastrophe that reached into the lonely hills to strike at him. Dressed in a leather jacket, an old cap and a worn pair of trousers, his shoes caked with the sour mud which gives name to the region, he tramped most of the night, seeking some clue to his lost namesake.

Mrs. Lindbergh, the attractive daughter of the late Senator Dwight W. Morrow, who expects another child with the late spring, remained indoors, secluded from all callers.

The famous father of the missing baby aided the troopers in their search. Col. Lindbergh looked haggard and sleepless from his all-night vigil—far different from the spic-and-span "Lindy" of other days.

"I intend to remain awake until my baby returns home," Col. Lindbergh said when a friend suggested he get some sleep.

"My wife, Anne, is in bed. I guess the strain was too much for her."

The Lindbergh family physician was summoned to look after Mrs. Lindbergh.

"We have received several leads, but most of them have fallen down," said Col. Lindbergh.

BABY IMAGE OF HIS FAMOUS FATHER

Hopewell, N. J., March 2 (INS)—Curly-haired, blue-eyed and chubby perhaps best describes the appearance of the sturdy 20-month-old Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr., kidnapers' victim.

The world-famous infant is described by those who saw him as the miniature image of his world-famous flying father, Col. Lindbergh.

A friend of Mr. and Mrs. Lindbergh who observed the baby in the kindergarten of his aunt, Miss Elizabeth Morrow, said of him today:

"The baby is just learning to talk. What does he say? Oh, mostly the words that all babies learn to say first.

"He is an unusually sturdy youngster, and seemed exceptionally bright and alert. He is well into the toddling stage, and as tall as the average baby of his age.

'SECRET SIXER' FEARS MANIAC

Chicago, March 2 (AP)—Col. Robert Isham Randolph, head of Chicago's famous "Secret Six," said today he was convinced that the kidnaping of Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr., was the act of an insane person.

Two years of running down kidnapers from coast to coast have convinced him, Col. Randolph said, that "no organized gang of kidnapers ever would attempt such a crime." There is nothing for authorities to do in the case, he added, until ransom demands are made or other clues are uncovered.

"There are lots of kidnaping gangs with enough facilities to carry out the job," he said, "but none of them brainless enough to try it. They know the whole country would be looking for them—and that the man who flew the Atlantic alone wouldn't be an easy victim.

"Organized kidnapers are looking for easy victims—not for children whose fathers are world heroes. They prey largely on gamblers, bootleggers, and other criminals whose personal affairs prevent them from calling the law to their aid."

The fact that no extortion demands were made before the kidnaping also indicate the Lindbergh baby abduction is the work of a demented person, Col. Randolph said. He expressed a belief that "even the most amateurish gang never would select such a victim."

"Lindy" and Anne had discarded the usual flying togs for street attire when the photographer persuaded them to pose.

LINDBERGH KIDNAPING SPURS DEATH PENALTY DEMAND

CONGRESS TO ACT; HOOVER ORDERS HUNT FOR BABY

Washington, March 2 (AP)—The federal government today entered the hunt for the son of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh and his kidnapers amid a clamor in Congress for legislation to check such crimes.

The co-operation of the Department of Justice was pledged after President Hoover had conferred with Atty.-Gen. Mitchell. Customs and immigration authorities likewise watched for the culprits at the borders.

In the House there was quick approval of a bill making it a Federal offense to send kidnaping threats through the mail and imposing heavy penalties for violation. A special committee meeting was sought to consider another measure to lay a Federal ban against abductions that transcend state boundaries.

MORROW SUCCESSOR.

The kidnaping of the Lindbergh child was called to the attention of both House and Senate as their sessions opened.

As Congress met, it soon was evident how deeply the crime had struck the legislators.

Senator Barbour of New Jersey called it a "ghastly tragedy," while Representative Seger of New Jersey cited to the House the shock felt everywhere.

Barbour asked for early consideration by the judiciary committee of the bill to make kidnaping a felony. He succeeded in the Senate the late Dwight W. Morrow, grandfather of the kidnaped child.

Seger told the House:

"I can think of no crime that cuts the heartstrings and causes more anguish to father and mother than the kidnaping of their child. As a father aid grandfather, I appeal to the House to pass the bills pending making kidnaping a federal crime."

There was applause. Rep. Cochran (D., Mo.), author of a kidnaping bill, praised Seger for supporting his measure.

The Houhe postoffice committee, approving legislation for federal prosecution of those who send kidnap threats through the mail, raised the fine from $1000 to $5000 and the imprisonment penalty form five to 20 years.

FOR DEATH PENALTY.

Senator Patterson (R., Mo.) said he would press for immediate action on his bill providing the death penalty for interstate kidnaping.

Expressing great indignation at the Lindbergh kidnaping, Norris said it had brought the question of federal legislation to thef ore and made it a problem for immediate attention.

(The bill introduced by Rep. John J. Cochran, Democrat, Missouri, provides that persons convicted of kidnaping "shall be punished by death or imprisonment for such a term of years as the court in its discretion may determine" and also proposes to make a threat of kidnaping a federal offense.)

Strongly impressed by the testimony presented by Chicago's "Secret Six" and the Vigilantes of St. Louis, Sumners, a Texas Democrat, favoring states' rights, had conceded a basis in equity for federal assistance to local authorities in catching kidnapers crossing state lines.

BLAMES LOCAL RULERS

While expressing his willingness to further federal aid to kidnaping control, Sumners laid crimes such as the Lindbergh kidnaping directly at the door of local communities.

"That sort of thing is not possible among a self-governing people," he said. "It is a terrible penalty that local communities have to pay for their failure to control the elements in their midst.

"There will be no escape from such terrible happenings so long as people of a community permit criminal gangs to organize."

A handful of veteran Congressmen only last week were stirred to indignation after hearing a terrible tale of kidnaping and torture for ransom, operated wholesale in the Mid-West by an alleged ring working in many cities spiriting victims from city to city to place the barrier of state lines between the criminals and the law.

The "racket," these men indicated, is being run by ex-bank robbers who have found it an easy way to cash in on crime, and who are fiendishly ingenious in devising torture to make the victims and relatives "come across."

Lindy's Mother Stays in Detroit

Detroit, March 2 (AP)—Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh, Sr., mother of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, carried on in her classroom at the Cass Technical high school here today despite the kidnaping of her grandson.

Although greatly worried, Mrs. Lindbergh indicated she would not go to New Jersey unless there were new developments.

First word of the kidnaping came to Mrs. Lindbergh at 11 p. m. last night in a telephone call from Anne Lindbergh.

GUARDED IN KIDNAPING

Dewey House, the Smith College dormitory in Northampton, where Constance Morrow, aunt of the kidnaped Lindbergh baby, lives. Miss Morrow has been under guard there for the past two weeks because of the threatening letters.

MRS. MORROW HURRIES TO ANNE'S SIDE

By DOROTHY DUCAS
International News Correspondent.

Englewood, N. J., March 2 (INS)—Mrs. Dwight W. Morrow, grandmother of the kidnaped Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr., shocked but bearing up stoically under the blow of his abduction, hurried today to the Hopewell, N. J., home of Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh.

She went there after she had tried all morning to reach Mrs. Lindbergh by telephone. She was unable to do so because the police had commandered the wire for reports on the search for the baby and no outside calls were possible.

GOES TO ANNE'S SIDE

A procession of expensive cars drew up at the Morrow house from early morning on, as "Betty" Morrow's friends learned of the abduction and came to offer their sympathy.

The grandmother of young Charlie (he is always called that and his father is called Charles) could not rest away from the center of activity, however, and as soon as possible departed for her daughter's side.

In quick, nervous tones she said that she hoped the kidnaping of the famonus flier's infant would be given the widest possible publicity, as publicity was considered by her the surest means of rescuing the baby from the hands of his abductors.

GOING TO HOPEWELL.

Through her closest friend, Mrs. Charles Hulst, wife of a local lawyer, Mrs. Morrow declared she had no direct word since last night from her daughter, Mrs. Lindbergh, or her son-in-law.

"Mrs. Morrow, though profoundly affected, of course," said Mrs. Hulst, "is bearing up well under the strain. She did not break down although the shock of the first announcement of the tragedy visibly affected her."

Mrs. Morrow's daughter, Elizabeth, was with her mother here at the Morrow home. Miss Morrow today did not attend her class in the kindergarten where she teaches and where the Lindbergh baby occasionally played when visiting his grandmother.

TOWN IS SADDENED.

The entire town felt saddened by the kidnaping of the baby, for it felt a community interest in it as well as Col. Lingbergh's romance with one of their most distinguished residents, Miss Anne Morrow, daughter of the late Senator and Mrs. Dwight W. Morrow.

Almost everyone in town at one time or another had seen the "world's most famous baby," which was born here, where the Lindberghs were married.

Most of the men and women could not have felt more grief-stricken than they did had a child of theirs fallen victim to a kidnap band.

Gang Lists Inspected for Clues

New York, March 2 (AP)—Scanning their lists of extortionists who strike at big money by seizing helpless victims, authorities today thought it might be such a gang as that operating here last year which made away with Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr.

Several months ago rumors of a kidnap plot threw high professional and theatrical circles into fright. Police were tipped that a highly organized group had marked a list of these wealthy folk for spiriting away.

Detectives disclosed that among the rich personages who had been placed under constant guard to protect them from abduction was Frank Keeney, Brooklyn theatrical magnate and former Florida race track owner. Detectives said extortion on a mass production basis had been attempted by a band operating from Philadelphia. No one was arrested.

PILOTS OFFER AID IN HUNT

Chicago, March 2—David Bencke, president of the Air Line Pilots' Association, announced his organization, including 500 pilots, ready to help "in any way possible" in the search for the kidnaped Lindbergh baby.

"While we realize that at present no definite action can be taken, we are eager to serve," Bencke said today.

Members of the association live throughout the nation and could be called immediately if kidnapers of Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr., were located, he explained.

POLICE HERE AID IN HUNT FOR LINDY BABY

Any green Chrysler sedan, but particularly one bearing the New Jersey license A-1153, was being watched for by Boston police and State troopers today following the Lindbergh baby kidnaping.

At request of New York police, relaying the request of New Jersey authorities, Capt. Charles T. Beaupre of the state police, sent out a force of 100 troopers to guard all road entrances into the State, and detailed 100 troopers for the same purpose today.

AUNT IS GUARDED

Also, at Smith College, where Constance Morrow, aunt of the missing baby, is a student, Lieut. Holland Avery and Trooper Daniel McColgan were stationed to protect he from any threat of harm, threats against her having been made three years ago.

There was no guard over her brother, Dwight Morrow, Jr., however, at Amherst College, where he is a junior, and where he lives in the home of Prof. and Mrs. Victor Rice at 35 Woodside ave.

Dwight, Jr., who is prominent in Amherst affairs, first learned of the kidnaping through newspapers today. He declared he needed no guard, but was not sure whether he would return home to New Jersey to assist in the search.

QUESTION AUTOISTS

"I understand the family notified Connie early today," the uncle of the Linderbergh baby said, "but I guess they couldn't get word to me. I have a private phone in my room."

Meanwhile, in Boston, Police Supt. Michael H. Crowley had issued orders similar to those of Capt. Beaupre, and any green Chrysler sedan sighted on the road was stopped and the occupants questioned.

BABY "GIFT" TO ANNE ON 22D BIRTHDAY

Englewood, N. J., March 2 (US)—The country's most celebrated baby, Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr., was born on Sunday, June 22, 1930, at 1:10 p. m. at the home of his maternal grandparents, the late Ambassador and Mrs. Dwight W. Morrow.

So tremendous was the interest in his arrival that within a few minutes after the announcement of the birth was made, it had been telegraphed and cabled to the ends of the earth.

Charles, Jr., came as a birthday gift to his mother, Mrs. Anne Morrow Lindbergh, for she was 22 on that Sunday. His father, the famous flier, was 28.

The first "official" announcement of the baby's arrival came from the late Ambassador who, an hour after the child was born, told a friend:

"I'm a grandfather, and it's a boy! But don't you tell anyone."

IMAGE OF FATHER

In Lindbergh's usual taciturn fashion, only the mere fact that his son and heir had arrived was announced. But from more talkative attendants these important facts came on that first day:

He weighed seven and one-half pounds. His hair was blond and curley. He looked "just like his father."

In the four days between June 22 and the day the birth certificate was filed, members of the Morrow and Lindbergh family participated in an amicable discussion as to what the infant would be named.

That question was settled when the birth certificate disclosed he was to be "junior." And it was understood to have been Mrs. Lindbergh's choice all along. It was reported, too, that Lindbergh had favored calling the mite after his father-in-law, but that for the first time since he hopped the Atlantic three years before he was turned back from his goal.

FLYING BANNED

When Charles, Jr., was only four weeks old, it was reported he might take his first airplane ride on a trip to the North Haven, Me., home of his grandparents.

This plan was postponed, however, and for the first few months of his life the baby remained at the Morrow home, guarded like a mediaeval prince and seen only by intimate friends of the Morrow family and his famous father.

A little later the proposed flying career of the Eaglet went into a ground loop, when physicians decided the child must not be taken for any sky rides.

ATTENDED KINDERGARTEN

In Maine, as a Englewood, extraordinary precautions were taken to guard the baby.

Rumors that special watchmen had been assigned were confirmed when it became known that Col. Lindbergh, as the result of threats from "cranks," had taken such steps to protect his son.

Similar care was taken after the parents returned from the Orient and took their son to their Hopewell, N. J., home.

Lindy Garage Given Over to Reporters

Hopewell, N. J., March 2 (AP) — Mud-spattered reporters, cold and tired after a hectic night's work covering the Lindbergh kidnaping, were given the flying colonel's garage as a headquarters today.

Col. Henry Breckenridge, Lindbergh's attorney, served coffee to newapapermen and threw open the garage for those who were at the scene earliest last night.

ANNE'S SISTER GUARDED

told me. Oh, I don't know who could do a thing like that."

To questions the grief-stricken girl only repeated:

"I don't know. I don't know."

The previous threat against her was made in May, 1929, when a demand that she obtain $50,000 from her late father, then ambassador to Mexico, under pain of kidnaping, torture and death.

CHECK OLD CLUES

In belief that a link may exist between the threat of Constance in 1929 and the kidnaping last night, Boston police were watching all roads and transportation terminals today for the missing baby and abductors.

The threats against Constance occurred on the eve of Col. Lindbergh's marriage to Anne Morrow, sister of Constance, who were frustrated by Lindbergh's spiriting the girl away from Milton Academy to North Haven, Me., the Morrow summer estate.

Today Boston and Milton police were going over the clues uncovered in the previous investigation, with every available inspector and special officer attempting to unearth some clue to the identity of the baby kidnapers.

ESCAPED IN PLANE

Nothing was known of the threats to torture and kill Constance until it was learned that Constance, a 15-year-old student at Milton Academy, had been spirited away in an amphibian plane and was under guard in Maine.

It was discovered then that a letter had been received by the Morrow family, instructing that a package containing $50,000 be left behind a stone wall in Grove st., the Germantown section of West Roxbury.

Detectives and police smuggled Constance out of the academy and smuggled into her room a young girl operative bearing a resemblance to the ambassador's youngest daughter.

ESCAPE TRAP

On the appointed day for leaving the package of money, the young operative followed instructions in a letter and tossed a package over the wall at the designated spot.

Boston, Milton and Dedham detectives were secreted around the spot but the authors of the letters did not appear.

On the following day, news of Constance's arrival in North Haven, Me., was published—the newspapers knowing nothing at that time of the plot against her and her family—and the blackmailers took fright and did not repeat their demands.

TORTURE THREATENED

The second letter sent by the extortioners described in revolting details how she would be tortured and put to death if she did not get the sum from her father and place it behind the wall without notifying anyone as to the purpose of her request for the money.

Dwight Morrow, Jr., young uncle of the kidnaped child, attended his classes today and said he did not think he would go home for the present. He was visibly affected.

"I am greatly shocked," he said, when news of the kidnaping was given by the Boston Evening American.

A short time afterward a domestic in the Morrow household telephoned to him about it.

"I have not seen the baby since Christmas," he said. "I saw him last when I visited my sister and brother-in-law at their home in Hopewell, N. J. Everything was wonderfully happy there."

BABY'S AUNT GUARDED

Constance Morrow, Mrs. Lindbergh's sister and aunt of the kidnaped baby. She is a student in Smith College and has been closely guarded by State police recently because of letters threatening to abduct either Miss Morrow or the baby.

U. S. Guards Border to Balk Kidnap Flight to Canada

Niagara Falls, N. Y., March 2 (AP)—Search for Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr., and his kidnapers extended to the international border today. United States immigration and customs authorities received instructions from Washington to keep close watch on the border to prevent escape of the abductors to Canada.

Instructions from Washington were to pay particular attention to automobiles bearing New Jersey plates. All cars licensed in that state crossing the bridges were subjected to thorough search and their occupants rigidly questioned.

New York Sends Plane to Aid Kidnap Search

New York, March 2 (AP)—The Ludington Air Lines announced today that at the request of the authorities it was sending a tri-motored airplane to Hopewell, N. J., to aid in the search for the kidnaped Lindbergh baby.

All Virgnia Roads Under Guard to Head Kidnapers

Richmond, Va., March 2 (AP)—An "on-guard" order today set patrolmen watching every highway in Virginia for the kidnapers of the Lindbergh baby.

THEY FOUND LOVE UNDER SKIES OF ANCIENT MEXICO

The whole world called it an ideal match when Col. Charles A. Lindbergh wooed and won Anne Morrow.

To many people their romance and wedding provided the last necessary story-book touch in the saga of the youthful viking of the air mail lanes, who swept to fame and immortality with his lone flight across the Atlantic, to finally storm the purple mansions of society and finance to win his bride.

An odd couple they were at first glance. The tall gangling hero of the air, bashful and awkward in the company of women but metamorphosed into a cold, calculating machine at the controls of a plane, and the tiny, elfin-like college girl, born to the purple of finance and society, at ease in any company, although naturally shy and retiring.

ODD BUT ALIKE

Odd they were truly, but also oddly alike. Both were of the old-fashioned type, as contrasted to the modern co-ed and the well dressed, sleek haired collegiates who danced attendance upon them. Both possessed a well developed sense of humor which manifested itself in harmless horseplay and joking.

Reports of their romance, however, aroused considerable surprise among old acquaintances of Lindbergh and among college classmates of Anne Morrow at Smith. Early associates of the Colonel who was known as "Slim" when he winged the mails over the western section of the country, recalled that he had literally fled from women and never manifested any interest in them.

Classmates at Smith College recalled the "Lone Eagle's" chosen bride as a shy, unassuming girl who held the respect of the entire student body but had only a few close friends because of her retiring nature.

Her chief interest appeared to be her studies and poetry in which she showed marked aptitude. She also wrote the lyrics for the Ivy Day song for her class and the senior song as well.

All were agreed, however, that she was unspoiled, never assuming anything because of her wealth or social position.

When the engagement of the couple became known the opinion was general at the college that they were ideally fitted.

"Just the sort of a girl Lindbergh would be likely to pick out, according to what the papers say about him," was the general opinion. "She was more or less old-fashioned at schooland could never be described as the flapper type."

They also pointed out the great dissimilarity in height between the pair. The colonel was noted for his height and fair features. Miss Morrow, the Smith girls said, was exceptionally small and very dark.

MEETING RECALLED

Smith girls also recalled her return from Mexico City after the Christmas vacation in 1927 when she first met Lindbergh. Although not indicating any personal feeling regarding him at that time, she was able to furnish confidantes with a complete and 'fascinating" picture of the prominent aviator, friends said.

She majored in English during her Smith undergraduate career and was given special honors in the subject at her graduation in June, 1928.

Her meeting with Lindbergh has been variously described, but it was not until they had been acquainted for some time that there was any definite indication of their romance. In fact, it was believed for a time that the flier favored her older sister, Elizabeth, more than Anne.

It was in the Christmas season of 1927 that the world's most romantic figure came winging into Mexico City and swept his way into the heart of the daughter of Dwight Morrow, the ambassador to Mexico.

It can be imagined that the shy little college girl was looking forward to his arrival as she sped across the continent by train from Northampton to rejoin her family for the Christmas holidays. And with her she carried several books dealing with aviation, something which she was not familiar with but which she determined to know a great deal about before the hero of the Atlantic flight arrived at her home.

She, with the whole world, had read of Lindbergh's bashfulness and his apparent lack of interest in women. With her natural intelligence and intuition, she evidently realized that most of Lindbergh's indifference to women lay in their inability to talk his language.

Lindbergh's heart and soul were in aviation and had been from his earliest youth when the science was just advancing from infancy. Like all men, Lindbergh would naturally talk on the subject that interested him most and few women could make an entertaining conversationalist for the serious young flier.

It is to be expected that his first meeting and conversation with little Anne Morrow was somewhat of a shock. Lindbergh had already arrived when Anne reached Mexico City. She met him and it was apparently just another girl for the Colonel. Then she started to talk with him.

He was amazed at her knowledge of the technical details of aviation and soon was talking and working with her in a maner which would have amazed old friends who knew him. The hours which she had spent studying the various books on aeronautics had not been in vain. She had really interested the Colonel, who, no doubt, decided that after all there were some intelligent women.

Even then, he gave no indication of any serious feeling toward her, but devoted his time to both sisters.

He and the family of the girls were beleged with queries. Lindbergh remained a stony and aloof silence, but the family readily admitted that he was friendly with both girls, but they didn't know which he liked best.

There was a grim irony in the situation too. In wooing a daughter of Dwight Morrow the former partner of J. P. Morgan, the flier threw aside the heritage of political hatred from his father, the late anti-Wall st. representative from Minnesota, avowed enemy of big banking and instigator of the 1911 "money trust" investigation.

Lindbergh's father never failed in a chance to blast bankers, Wall st, and especially the famous financial house of J. P. Morgan. The latter firm was included in what he designated as the "money trust" in his book "Economic Pinch," written in 1923.

But in February, 1929, when the engagement of Lindbergh and Anne Morrow was announced in Mexico City, it marked the end to the old rivalry between the House of Morrow and the House of Lindbergh. It was another story-book touch to the romance of the famous pair.

SILENT LINDY

Everyone had been certain that Lindbergh would favor the elder sister and it was accounted just one more instance of his strange ability to keep everyone unacquainted with his plans and affairs when his engagement to Anne was announced.

Even after the engagement was announced and the entire world awaited eagerly to hear some news of their idol's courtship, Lindbergh maintained his aloof manner with regard to the romance although expressing his willingness to discuss everything under the sun.

Similar secrecy was maintained regarding the wedding plans and hundreds of guesses and conjectures were made as to when the event would occur. Everywhere from Mexico City to the Morrow summer place in Maine were suggested and even Paris was mentioned as a locale for the wedding.

In April, 1929, Anne left Mexico for the East and the world was certain that the marriage would occur. When she reached the Morrow home in Englewood she was besieged by newspapermen and photographers but would say nothing about the wedding plans. Early in May it was announced that the family would leave for their place at North Haven, Me., and interest immediately shifted there with the prospect that the wedding would be held in that place.

A week later the family arrived there. Lindbergh, accompanied by his fiancee went there by plane. During their stay there it was learned for the first time that the noted aviator was instructing his wife in actual flying. The first lesson came on the anniversary of Lindbergh's epoch-making flight across the Atlantic.

While newspapermen remained in Maine the Morrows and Lindbergh slipped quietly away and returned to Englewood secretly. Anne had become annoyed by the publicity surrounding their wedding plans and had pleaded that the marriage date be advanced.

SECRET HONEYMOON

They were quietly married on May 27, 1929, with only a few intimates present at the ceremony. Scant details of the ceremony were published and among these it was learned that Lindbergh and his bride had edited the wedding ritual which was used in their marriage. It had been learned that the words used by the minister were not the conventional Presbyterian ritual and investigation disclosed the "editing."

The ceremony completed the couple made every possible preparation to depart just as secretly on their honeymoon. Newspapermen, tricked on the wedding, bent every effort to find them to inform the world of the doings of the happy couple and finally traced them.

Embarked on a motor cruiser they were traced through Long Island Sound ostensibly headed toward Boston.

On June 5, their cabin cruiser was located anchored off Provincetown and it was believed certain the honeymooners were headed for Boston. Again they fooled the public by turing up in Maine. After cruising about in Maine waters for some time the couple returned to New York and Lindbergh plunged into his work with the Guggenheim Foundation.

The first public appearance of the famous couple after their marriage took place at Mitchel Field, L. I., on June 20, 1929. After making a flight in the Guggenheim safety competition, Lindbergh again went up with his bride as a passenger.

Since then their life has been a succession of remarkable flights in which the shy retiring girl of college days has disappeared to become the constant companion of her flying husband on all his trips by air. The colonel too has lost his awkward bashfulness and has become a serious and untiring worker for the advancement of aviation.

In September, 1929, the couple made their first noted air journey together when they flew to Central America to chart the unexplored jungles of that section from the air. The scientific work was undertaken in conjunction with a repetition of his former good-will flight over the Caribbean area.

The expedition was extremely favorable from an archeological standpoint and several uncharted ruins of Mayan civilization were discovered and marked by the party. The flight ended Oct. 10, 1929 when the party headed for Miami.

Early in 1930, Lindbergh and his wife made a leisurely transcontinental flight to California, where he conducted several experiments to test high-altitude flying in connection with the future development of aerial transportation. His wife was a ready and helpful aid to him during these experiments.

Shortly after this rumors of another outstanding event in the family again directed the spotlight of publicity on the noted flier and his bride. Reports that there was to be an heir in the family were finally confirmed, although every effort was made to guard the fact and later the probable birthdate of the child.

Early in June Mrs. Anne Lindbergh retired to the Morrow home in Englewood. On June 22, 1930, the most famous baby in the world at that time was born. It was a boy and weighed 7¾ pounds at birth.

As had been generally expected he was named Charles Augustus Lindbergh Jr., and his birth was hailed throughout the world as an added blessing to the union of the noted pair. When only a few weeks old it was announced that the baby would be taken up in a plane by his flying parents and, although this was considered as foolhardy by many, the child suffered no ill effects.

In May, 1931, Mrs. Lindbergh took flight examinations for a private pilot's license and passed without difficulty as her husband looked on proudly.

About July, the announcement of their now famous flight to Japan and China which was tragically halted by the death of Mrs. Lindbergh's father, Dwight Morrow, while the famous pair were in China, was made.

After a short stay in Japan they hopped to China where they engaged in carrying on relief for victims of the Yangtse flood and making an aerial survey of the flood area. While here they had their now famous accident in which Lindbergh's plane capsized during a takeoff in the Yangtse on October 2. Neither he nor his wife were injured and the plane was shipped to Shanghai for repairs.

While here they were stunned by the news of Morrow's sudden death and hastily cut short their flight plans to return to this country. Rushing by steamer across the Pacific, they embarked in a plane on the west coast and were at Newark airport on October 23.

Since that time the couple have appeared but little in the public eye. They are at present engaged in completing their home on a track of land they purchased near Princeton in 1930.

Messages From China for Lindy

Shanghai, March 2 (INS)—News of the kidnaping of Col. Lindbergh's baby was received here early this afternoon while Japanese guns were roaring in a general offensive.

Col. Lindbergh and Mrs. Lindbergh had made many friends during their recent visit here and many sympathetic messages were cabled them.

BEACON HILL

Betty Alden

MRS. JOSEPH WOODS

RECENT DOINGS WE LIKE TO LOOK BACK UPON: Chatting with Miss Amy Bridgman at the perfectly delightful press luncheon at the Statler, where we were invited to sit at the head table, which so completely went to OUR head that we made a very silly speech—if a hundred stumbling words may be so called.

* * *

Miss Bridgman listening intently to our philosophical outpourings instead of OUR listening to her rhymes and verses. We did manage to get a peek into her published book of poems and with a deep sigh of relief found we could understand them. Some poetry completely confuses us and we want to simply die of awkwardness when it is discussed.

* * *

This dear, understanding lady with a merry twinkle in her eye informed us that another book of her verses will soon be off the press and what an achievement THAT is. Only a beautiful soul could spend her time thinking beautiful thoughts and imagine spending the time to make such thoughts sing in poems.

* * *

We were so sorry to hurry away from the luncheon before the concert and readings were over but duty called.

Gracious President Presides

MRS. FLAGG, THE GRACIOUS PRESIDENT OF THE club, very distinguished in a dark red velvet afternoon frock, trimmed with real lace. Her two charming little daughters, Nancy and Julia B., looking up from the floor table where they sat at their mother presiding, with such delicious admiration in their young faces, and confiding to US that mother was the head of THREE clubs.

Appreciated

SPEAKING OF POETRY, this is the sort that warms our heart, and you can just bet Helena, my fan friend, it is appreciated.

With Betty Alden, in fancy, I like to go,
Where the debs are putting on a show;
She takes you gently by the hand,
Presto! At the opera you land;
You can just see those sumptuous gowns
Described by Betty
Worn by society all around.
Wasn't the Poverty-Party grand?
To Bermuda I hope she'll not go,
'Cause how will I see the Vincent Club Show,
In fancy, with Betty Alden.

A Surprise

WE WERE SURPRISED and pleased to hear that William McFee, our favorite author, has been divorced from the lady from Salonika, was it? Bill says that there is no one woman interesting enough to write a whole book about her. Likewise we suppose no one woman inspiring enough to live with a whole lifetime. We remember writing a real love-letter to Mr. McFee after reading Capt. Macedoine's Daughter years and years ago and to this day we wonder IF he received it. How many of you fans have ever done such a silly naive thing?

On Bermuda Cruise

MISS LOUISA HUNNEWELL, one of THE Hunnewells, has gone on a West Indies cruise, closing up her beautiful house on Beacon st. for a while. The F. S. Moseleys are her next-door neighbors. And that reminds us that we saw Miss Harriet at the Fashion Show last week and she is just as beautiful as ever. Evidently the rumors of her automobile accident were very much exaggerated.

Business Career

THE VERY LATEST NEWS is that Mrs. Charlie Codman and Mrs Jimmie Parker are starting in as salesladies with a smart flower shop on Charles st. Very attractive and clever are both of these delightful women and we will look forward with interest to their career.

ANOTHER RECRUIT TO the business world is Mrs. Harcourt Amory who is beginning in the interior decorating world.

WORD FROM THE SOUTH reaches us that Mrs. Janice Vaughan Smith has taken a house at Aiken and has as a house-guest Miss Frances Goodwin, the daughter of Augustus Goodwin. Other news in the family is that Betty Barrell Woods is blessed eventing in the Spring, if the Spring doesn't arrive too early. The other daughter of the House of Woods, Mrs. Norman Sturgis, is on from Albany, N. Y., making mother and daddy, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Woods, a visit.

America to Be Center of Art

New York, March 2—America will be the next center of the world's artistic development, according to Edward Biberman, brilliant young modernist, whose portrait of the actress Gale Sondergaar is one of the features of the exhibition of portraits of Americans by American artists, at the American-Anderson galleries.

The exhibition is sponsored by Mrs. William Randolph Hearst for the benefit of the free coffee and sandwich stations maintained for the unemployed at milk fund distributing booths.

Biberman holds aesthetic views distinctly at variance with conservatism. A follower of Oswald Spengler, he believes that here is an inevitable logical necessity linkink the art, thought, politics and science of an era. He adds:

"Art in the old world, Chiaroscuro art, is dead. The modern world was born, culturally, architecturally, industrally in America. Consequently in America the art of today's world will reach its flowering."

The exhibition, comprising ninety portraits of prominent figures and typical individuals in current life as seen by the leaders of contemporary American art will remain on view until Mach 19.

Books—And a Number of Things

By CHARLES HANSON TOWNE

Stage fright is a very common thing. It is experienced even by actors who have trod the boards for years. Mrs. Fiske suffered from it all her life, and particularly when she gave her opening performances in the metropolis before our sophisticated audiences. Yet she had been born, practically "in a prop trunk."

The truth of the matter is that an artist must be so constituted that he responds to the feeling or lack of feeling, out in the dim auditorium; and the less nervous he is, the less of an artist he is. Marion Talley is said not to have a nerve in her body, and the story runs that when she made her debut in New York at the Metropolitan she came on the stage with all the assurance of a pretty girl going to a beauty parlor. That may be one reason why she made no deep impression.

I have seen actors who were never very terrified on the stage, but when they were called upon to make an extemporaneous speech they invariably broke out in a gentle perspiration and were scarcely able to utter a sound. To speak lines that have been prepared for one, and to speak one's own, are two vastly different matters.

* * *

Which leads me to say that there is a new kind of fright in the world; that known to those who first speak over the radio. One becomes "mike" shy. Margaret Anglin, who has been on the stage for years, dreaded her first appearance before the microphone. Her voice trembled during the first five minutes of her initial reading and, hearing her, I dreaded to think what she must be going through. The ordeal is not to be laughed at. If one has imagination—and every true artist has that—one visualizes that vast, unseen audience all over the length and breadth of the land; and one may also be conscious of the fact that many, not caring for one's little speech or song, may tune off. I hope the day will never come when the speaker will be able to see this gesture made in Kansas or Oklahoma. That would be the final cruelty.

I know a man who is famous for his after-dinner oratory; yet on the one occasion when he boldly stood before a microphone he became so terrified that he cried out after the first minute, "I can't go on! I can't go on!" Yet there he was; and he knew he had to go on. Finally, he did. But he has never had the courage to play a return engagement.

* * *

Let me modestly say that I had the temerity to go on the air not long ago, and my only sensation was one of great loneliness. There was but one person in the studio with me—the announcer: and I felt rather foolish, sitting there embracing the instrument which I knew would carry my voice thousands of miles. Being a novice, I had taken the wise precaution of writing out my talk. I couldn't have uttered a word without those typewritten pages in front of me. The problem was to read them so that they might sound spontaneous—no small task. If one stumbles, one is lost; and one dreads mispronouncing a word. For it is madness to correct oneself.

I like the instant returns one gets from newspaper work; but it is nothing compared with the radio. Letters almost invariably come in the very next morning; and here is one which I should like to share with my readers, because I happen to agree with every point the writer of it makes:

"Whenever advertising comes on I shut the radio off, and I have noticed that a great many people do the same. So I thought maybe you would like to write something about how unfair advertisers are to those whose programs follow when they abuse the privilege of entering homes with their advertising under the pretext of entertaining us. We all know that neither newspapers nor magazines could be produced at nominal rates without advertising. But in printed matter one can take it or leave it alone. The advertising is there, and the eye catches it, but it does not interfere with the pleasure of reading. It sort of sneaks up on you painlessly, and it is there for you to consult if you are 'in the market,' as the saying is. But one would never think of sitting down to an evening of entertainment with a dozen chattering salesmen in the room. So, naturally, when an advertiser takes advantage of your radio hospitality you turn the darned thing off, and then Mr. Other Advertiser, who has also paid for time, is cheated out of his listeners.

"Now, I am not ungrateful to the advertisers who make my entertainment possible. I have been in the advertising field ever since I started to work, and I have paid an income tax on five figures, which I am telling you so that you will see that while I am quite dumb, advertising has done a lot for me in a quiet way. But I do wish that advertisers would see that the place for their stories is in print.

"When a man comes into your home to entertain you, he may win your friendship and regard so that you will buy his bonds or his brushes out of liking for him; but if he comes with the pretext of amusing you and then rattles on every minute about his product, you will, if you are human, kick him out. And you will not only kick him out, you will probably refuse to let the next salesman in at all. An advertiser gives you five minutes of music and ten minutes of sales talk, and you not only turn him off, but you don't turn the thing on again for a while; thus the next fellow, who may be a gentleman about his product, does not get a hearing at all."

I say "Amen" to all of this. But what can be done about it? Perhaps the blatant advertisers, as a special punishment, will one day be able to see that they are talking to thin air.

The Life Story of Garner

—By George Rothwell Brown—

CHAPTER X

WHEN THE Democratic party came back into power in the House of Representatives, in 1911, under Champ Clark's brilliant and patriotic leadership, it had been wandering in the outer darkness for sixteen years.

No Democratic Speaker had presided over the House since the close of the Speakership of Charles F. Crisp, of Georgia, in 1895.

With the exception of a few of the "elder statesmen" like Clark, the great body of Democrats in the House had enjoyed absolutely no parliamentary experience under Democratic rule. Clark had served under Crisp. He had preserved in his own soul the Democratic tradition, and the historic Democratic fighting spirit.

Many of the Democrats who had fought with him against "Cannonism" before very long left the House, and eventually went to the Senate. Among them were such men as Ollie James, of Kentucky, Broussard, of Louisiana; Hardwick, of Georgia; Hitchcock, of Nebraska; Hughes, of New Jersey; Sheppard, of Texas; Stanley, of Kentucky; Underwood, of Alabama, and Joseph T. Robinson, of Arkansas, the present Democratic leader of the Senate.

The promotion of these men left big gaps in the Democratic ranks. Champ Clark was obliged to train up a new generation of lieutenants who would be capable of becoming the leaders of the future. He had his eye on all likely material. John N. Garner had long been under his observation.

CONFIDENCE AT HOME

Garner by this time had spent eight or nine years in the House. He had demonstrated, for the one most essential thing, that he had the confidence of the people of his own district and might be relied upon to return to Congress every two years indefinitely. This sort of stability in a representative is indispensable to a career of leadership.

Champ Clark had also observed that Garner was an economist of words. He had been four terms in the House and hadn't made a speech yet. Never once had he taken the floor and soared off on a flight of rhetorical oratory.

Garner spent most of his time in his seat watching the progress of legislation and not on his feet making futile addresses. Few speeches have ever changed a vote in Congress. Now and then he arose to ask a question, to contradict an erroneous statement. At times he would challenge James R. Mann, then the real Republican leader in the House and by all odds the shrewdest and most adroit parliamentarian on that side. Clark saw that Garner had acquired a valuable grasp of the rules of the House, a very rare accomplishment. He began to use him more and more, to depend upon him, to lean on him.

Clark appointed him a member of the conference committee on the diplomatic and consular bill on Feb. 21, 1913, and this was the first assignment of this kind he had had.

With the beginning of the Sixty-Third Congress, which met in extra session in April 13, shortly after the beginning of the first term of President Woodrow Wilson, John N. Garner obtained the reognition in the House for which he had worked so hard.

Committees were now elected by the House, which meant that Democratic members of committees were chosen by the party caucus. Oscar W. Underwood in this manner became chairman of ways and means. It was the greatest forward step Garner had made in his Congressional career. He won the place by merit. He had been tried and was trusted, by the leaders, and by the House.

It is again, characteristic of the man, that he turned down an important chairmanship on a committee which, in the minds of most men, ranks high, in order to gain a place of inferior rank, well down on the Democratic side of the Committee on Ways and Means, the place upon which his heart had been set almost from the day he had entered Congress.

Places on Ways and Means were coveted by many ambitious Democratic members of the House, all of whom had some elements of strength. As is usual, in the making up of committees there were many spirited contests for the vacancies, many more applicants than available places. Much trading went on, support here for support promised there. The customary amount of what is called "log-rolling," or, less elegantly, but even more picturesquely, "you scratch my back and I'll scratch yours."

John N. Garner saw what was going on, and instead of being discouraged, he was stimulated to increased activity, renewed determination to reach his goal. He put up such a fight that finally it was said to him upon authority:

"Give up this effort to go on Ways and Means, and you can have the chairmanship of the Committee on Foreign Affairs."

John N. Garner's reply is worthy of preservation for all time, as a guide to all men when tempted to depart from the pathway they have laid out for themselves through life:

"I don't want the chairmanship of foreign affairs—I am going to a place where I can make a chairmanship for myself."

The group of leaders who were busily engaged in slate-making were aghast at such determination on the part of Garner. They had thought to sidetrack him with a chairmanship, among the prerogatives of which would be one of the most beautiful committee rooms in the Capitol, a high-salaried clerk, which meant so much more patronage, and, for the man who held that chairmanship, a recognized social position in the smart official life of Washington.

A chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, if he chooses, can be a high-stepper in the diplomatic set. He can attend all the banquets and dinners, and swank afternoon teas galore are within his grasp. He is a figure of some consequence at exclusive White House affairs. He has the pleasure of having ambassadors and ministers of foreign governments use his ear for a speaking trumpet filling him up with all sorts of propaganda.

John N. Garner was determined that his career in the House should be along the constructive lines of finance. He knew that a place on Ways and Means would lead him to where he wanted to go, and that the chairmanship of Foreign Affairs would force him into channels where he had no desire to go.

The fact is that Garner was not then, had not been before, and has not been since, unduly interested in foreign affairs. His whole heart and soul are bound up in the problems of plain, ordinary, everyday American people, exploited by outrageously high Republican tariffs and victimized by unfair tax laws. So Garner said:

"I am going to a place where I can make a chairmanship for myself."

How he made those words come true is not only a part of his own life story, but a part of the history of the House of Representatives.

FAMOUS KIDNAPING MYSTERIES ✦ By Win Brooks ✦ The DaMore Case

This is the first of a series of stories of famous kidnapings, interest in which has been reawakened by the kidnaping of the Lindbergh baby. A complete story will be told each day.

Boston's most notorious kidnaping was also a murder.

It is unsolved and the chances are 100 to one it never will be lved.

Its pitiful little victim was Salvatore DaMore, 10, who left s North End home on June 20, 1929, and was found a corpse on e Saugus marshes 17 days later after his father had paid $5000 ransom.

Salvatore was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Santo DaMore of 15 Stillman st. He had three little sisters and a baby brother. His father unfortunately, bootlegged liquor.

On June 20, 1929, he was chiefly concerned with the immediate prospect of summer vacation from school and his feud with the pigeons in the market district. To be sure, he was promoted, that day, from the fourth to the fifth grade of St. Mary's Parochial school but being a real boy he was much more interested in what beckoned him outside the classroom.

ON PIGEON HUNT

On the afternoon of the fatal day, four of Salvatore's school chums gathered at his house to launch a pigeon hunt. This is the North End equivalent of the English fox hunt with horse and hounds; the hunters, having no inn at which to meet, gathered at the home of leader. There are no dogs or horses, but there are slingshots and stones and plenty of pigeons.

Salvatore was the leader—master of pigeon hounds—and arming himself with his slingshot he sallied forth at the head of the group for the market district.

There, for an hour or so, the boys stalked unsuspecting groups of feeding pigeons and "dinged" at them with their slings and stones. Salvatore, it may be imagined, had no more foreboding of ill, than the pecking pigeon he potted.

The boys killed five pigeons. They started in a group to call on a man near Haymarket sq. who frequently paid them a few cents for the birds. En route, Salvatore became separated from his chums.

THOUGHT DROWNED

The four boys in the group called on their prospect, displayed their wares, sold them and departed, thinking Salvatore had gone home.

Salvatore, knowing the destination of his friends, arrived there a little later, learned they had been and gone and left himself.

No one, so far as police ever arned, saw him alive again.

When, that night and the following day, he did not return, his parents notified police. His parents and police both believed he might have fallen off the Warren Bridge and drowned.

As a great hunter he had often crawled under the bridge to take squabs out of their nests and sell them. People who recalled this, and believed the solution of Salvatore's disappearance lay therein, made clucking sounds with their tongues and remarked that such hings happen to little boys who sturb birds' nests.

Santo DaMore was so sure his son had fallen off the bridge that he hired divers to search the waters beneath it. He offered $1000 if the boy was found alive and $100 if his body was found.

On June 27 (it later developed) Santo DaMore received a letter postmarked in Lynn, ordering him to leave $5000 behind St. Anthony's Church in Revere—or Salvatore would be killed.

The father made a serious mistake. He decided to keep the letter a secret and deal with the kidnapers without the aid of police. But even if he had reported the letter to the authorities, Salvatore's life could not have been saved, for, it was later established, the boy was already dead when the first demand for money was made on his parent.

DaMore's secrecy did cost him $5000. He wrote a letter telling the kidnapers that if they took his boy to the Revere church (they could wear masks if they wished) he would meet them and hand them $5000 in exchange. He left the letter behind the church. It was ignored.

DEATH LETTER

Two days later he got another letter:

"If you don't send the money we will cut your boy's head off and leave it on your doorstep. If you do as you are directed to do you will leave the money, go away, come back two hours latr and you will find your boy waiting for you."

He was terrified. He had $3000. He mortgaged his house for $2000 more. He and Mrs. DaMore copied the numbers of the currency planning to give them to police if the kidnapers refused to give up the boy.

DaMore went alone with $5000 to Revere at 7 o'clock one night and left it behind the church as he was directed. Then he went away. But he couldn't stay away two hours. He was too nervous. He went back at 8 o'clock. The money was gone!

That heartened him. He thought.

"At 9 o'clock they'll bring Salvatore back."

He went away again and at 9 o'clock he returned.

BODY ON MARSH

He waited there, behind the church, for Salvatore. He waited all night. He might have waited till doomsday, but he decided it was time to tell police.

It was too late for police to make any headway although every agency of Suffolk County was bent to the task of apprehending the kidnapers. DaMore, police thought, had definite suspicious against someone in the North End liquor traffic, but he wouldn't name them.

On July 7, a motorist stopped on the Saugus marsh road to fix a tire and glancing out on the marsh he saw Salvatore. The kidnapers had given him up.

Salvatore had his slingshot in his hip pocket. He had a hole in his side. Dr. Nathaniel P. Breed said he was murdered and Dr. George B Magrath said he hadn't drowned. How he died has never been established. The hole in his side might have been a knif wound.

The kidnapers were now established as murderers and the search for them was redoubled. Mrs. DaMore, viewing the body of her first born, exclaimed:

"Patsy's carried out his threat."

Capt. Arthur McConnell, then the North End police division leader, said:

"The solution to the murder rests in the hands of the father who is afraid to tell what he knows for fear of his own life."

Police suspected a vendetta.

And then it was revealed that a fourth letter had been delivered to DaMore after his $5000 had been taken. This letter, cruelest of all, said:

"We have only got what has been due for a long time. Look in the river for yuor boy. We don't know anything about him."

Did the person who made the demands on the father and took his money really have a knowledge of the lad's fate?

NEVER BE SOLVED

Police think so. The Lynn postmark, coupled with the finding of the body in Saugus, indicates that he did.

Five men and four women were arrested as suspects in the case, questioned and released. District Attorney Foley said he had no evidence against them.

"Big Joe" Cavagnaro, the North End police inspector, might have solved the case but for his untimely death. He, more than anyone else in the police department, knew the secrets of the North End. But "Big Joe" died—still seeking the solution—and it probably never will be found.

Famous Abductions of Last Half-Century

The kidnaping of the infant son of Colonel Lindbergh recalls a long list of kidnapings during the last several decades. Outstanding are the following:

1874—Charles Ross of Germantown, Penn., never found despite years of search, offers of large rewards, and, more recently, claims of persons that they are Ross.

1907—Rose Giordiano of New York, later returned. The dnapers were arrested two years later.

1909—Billy Whitla of Sharon, Penn., released for $10,000 ansom; kidnapers were sentenced to prison.

1927—Marian Parker, 12, Los Angeles. Her mutilated body was returned to her father. Edward Hickman was hanged in 1928 as her "thrill slayer."

1928—Melvin Horst, 4, Orrville, O., never found. Two men went to prison, convicted of kidnaping, but later won new trials and acquittals.

1929—Jackie Thompson, Detroit. Returned after payment of $17,000 ransom. Three men convicted and $5000 recovered later.

1930—Michael H. Katz, drug company head, Kansas City. Paid $100,000 for his release two days after abduction.

1931—Mrs. Nell Donnelly, Kansas City manufacturer. Held for $50,000 ransom, but returned safely, supposedly without payment.

1931—Dr. Isaac D. Kelly of St. Louis, held for $150,000 ransom, but released after paying an undisclosed sum.

1931—Marian McLean, 6, Cincinnati, found dead from criminal assault. Charles Bischoff, 45, confessed, was sent to the State Hospital for the Criminal Insane.

1931—Adolphus Busch Orthwein, 13, of St. Louis, grandson of August A. Busch, returned safely after being held 20 hours. Charles Abernathy, negro, now serving ten years in prison for the kidnaping.

AERIAL POSSE AIDS HUNT

New York, March 2 (AP)—Famous airmen of the East, fellow members of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh in the fraternal organization known as the Quiet Birdmen, formed an aerial posse today to attempt to discover from the air the hideout of the kidnapers of the flying colonel's baby son.

From the headquarters of the secret organization the bare statement was made that decision had been reached to organize a search party, but the identity of the fliers to participate was not revealed.

"They all want to avoid any suggestion that they are trying to get any publicity out of this," an official of the order said. "They just want to do what they can to help their buddy and they're keeping their names out of it. They'll be taking off from various eastern airports all morning."

Lindbergh Home Is Mecca Now for Curiosity Seekers

Hopewell, N. J., March 2 (INS)—The house of Lindbergh, bereaved by the kidnaping of Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., today quickly became the mecca of curiosity seekers—not only by land, but from the air.

Screened by vigrin forest, its rambling Tudor lines could be glimpsed in miniature from the air. Scores of airplanes flew low over it. Even a New York-to-Washington passenger plane circled it for the benefit of the riders. However, automobilists were kept a mile away.

Kidnaping News Crowds Politics in German Papers

Berlin, March 2 (INS)—A wave of sympathy in Germany over the Lindbergh kidnaping today cooled political passions arising from the presidential election campaign.

All Berlin newspapers published the kidnaping on their front pages, along with numerous photographs, an extraordinary occurrence in this country.

Connecticut Guards All Roads Against Kidnapers

Hartford, Ct., March 2 (AP)—State police, advancing the theory that an attempt might be made to bring the kidnaped son of the Lindberghs into New England by way of Connecticut ordered flying patrols from all state barracks today to guard bridges and principal highways.

Maj. Frank M. Nichols said every precaution had been taken to detect suspicious looking cars.

To End a Cough In a Hurry, Mix This at Home

To quickly end stubborn coughs due to colds, it is important to soothe the inflamed membranes, get rid of the germs and also to aid the system inwardly to help throw off the trouble.

For these purposes, here is a home-made medicine, far better than anything you could buy at 3 times the cost. From any druggist, get 2½ ounces of Pinex. Pour this into a pint bottle, and add plain granulated sugar syrup or strained honey to fill up the pint. This takes but a moment, saves money, and makes a remedy so effective that you will never do without, once you have used it. Keeps perfectly, and children like it.

This simple remedy does three necessary things. First, it loosens the germ-laden phlegm. Second, it soothes away the inflammation. Third, it is absorbed into the blood, where it acts directly on the bronchial tubes. This explains why it brings such quick relief, even in the obstinate coughs which follow cold epidemics.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of Norway Pine, containing the active agent of creosote, in a refined, palatable form, and known as one of the greatest medicinal agents for severe coughs and bronchial irritations.

SHANGHAI IS SAD WITH LINDYS

By FLOYD GIBBONS

International News Service Staff Correspondent.

Shanghai, March 2 (INS)—Wu Te-Chen, mayor of the Chinese city of Shanghai, upon learning of the kidnaping of Col. Lindbergh's baby, telephoned me at 8 o'clock tonight:

"Please extend my heartfelt sympathy to Col. and Mrs. Lindbergh. I met them on their recent flight to the Orient and consider them two of China's greatest friends."

Extras, telling of the Chinese defeat on the Chapei-Woosung battle front also carried big headlines on the kidnaping of the Lindbergh baby.

COLD IS CLUE IN KIDNAPING

[illegible] Holly, N. J., March 2 (INS)—Ellis Parker, famous Burlington county chief of detectives, believes a drug addict, under stimulus of narcotics and a desire to extort money, kidnaped Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr.

Parker, probably the best-known ace detective in the East, has been working in this vicinity since word of the kidnaping was flashed to police last night.

He has issued special orders to all physicians to scrutinize closely every child they are called to attend especially for a cold.

Parker holds to the belief that a drug addict is responsible for the crime because no professional kidnaper or otherwise sane individual would risk his life in the man hunt that would inevitably follow such a notorious deed."

Fingerprinting Baby Would Balk Kidnaper—Claflin

Kidnaping of the Lindbergh baby, with the possibility that it may not be found for years and may grow up without knowing its true origin, should impress upon all parents the advisability of having their children fingerprinted at birth.

This observation was made today by Capt. James A. Claflin of Joy st. station, fingerprint expert formerly in charge of the identification bureau at police headquarters.

"If Charlie Ross—the lost Charlie Ross—had been fingerprinted at birth and still were living he could determine his identity if he had any suspicion the name he now bears is not his own," said Capt. Claflin.

"If there were a central fingerprint bureau and the fingerprints of all babies were registered there, every person now unidentified could be identified.

"Footprinting of babies is all right as far as it goes, but it is not efficient, is clumsy, involves a long process for identification and is not well known."

The Charlie Ross kidnaping referred to by Capt. Claflin occurred on July 1, 1874, when the four-year-old son of a Philadelphia merchant was enticed from his Germantown, Pa., home with his brother Walter, by two men in a buggy

Girl About Town

—By ALYCE SIEMENS—

Handicapped Casanova:

You deem yourself a Casanova quite,
And drool at some dull showgirl every night.
Disliking you, I find a mighty glee
In what these doll-like dames confide to me—
That what make fatuous all your fond demands
Are dandruff, halitosis, clammy hands!

Lifted From Life

There's a bachelor in town who dislikes being alone . . . Very often he picks up some unfortunate fellow roaming the streets, takes him out to his apartment, gives him a big feed and puts him up for the night . . . This bachelor usually keeps a giant roll of greenbacks handy all the time . . . Naturally, not knowing what the honesty of his guest-for-the-night may be, he's worked out a novel plan for making his roll safe from any "finder's keepers" business through the night . . . He waits until his "guest" has fallen asleep, then puts his fat roll in the unfortunate's trouser pocket . . . He goes to sleep himself then, always managing to awaken and retrieve his roll before the other fellow reaches for his trousers . . . He brags about it to his friends . . . Has perfect confidence in his clever trick . . . Whether he'll keep on with this hiding-of-his-roll stunt, after he awakens too late some morning, is what friends are waiting too find out!

Hashovers

Why do the "debs" call Sammy Elzen, drummer boy of the Neuman Brigade, "Society's Pet Singer" when Sammy only chants songs funny-fashion—in fact, we doubt very much if he's ever sung a note . . . Frederick K. Mougey (better known as "Freddie" to the Pretty Ones) used photos of his own prize horses on his Yule cards last year—by way of being sure folks would save 'em . . . There should be a law against the organs on the streets grinding out "Sing Something Simple" again this spring . . . "Red Wing" or "Old Gray Bonnet," please, if you must go back there for tunes! . . . Realtor Myron Taymore and his bride of three-months just "float through the air" when a-dance together . . . They danced through their wooing, we hear . . . Wonder if they realize how many dancers stop dancing just to watch their rhythmic stepping . . . It's a treat not to miss . . .

Indian Trader Here

There is little doubt in our mind that Hugh O'Connell, who played the part of the vaudeville fellow (who was forever eating and crunching Indian nuts) in the comedy, "Once in a Life Time" here a while back, certainly must have taken nut-eating lessons from Wick Miller, lanky Indian trader, now in town with those interesting Mexican Indians at White's . . . Wick's pockets are crammed with tiny, red-brown Indian nuts and he offers them to everyone, at any time . . . He chews out a mean kernal, too! . . . And would you believe it, Christino Casequito, moccasin maker of the visiting Indians, is the prohibition agent on his Indian reservation back home, and although "Chris" is 50 years old, he had to get his mother's permission before he could come away to Boston . . . And 38-year-old Trinidad Medina is a grandmother! . . . The Indians get a whale of a kick out of the way Americans dance . . . They think it's "a funny business" . . . Wick had them to the Grove last night to watch Hubsters carry on . . . and they tried to pitch camp in Lou Klayman's coattails!

That Happy Day

Tomorrow the mayor of Bridgeport, Ct., where the Fanchon and Marco unit is playing, featuring the Lucille Sisters, will make a mister and missus of Marge Lucille and Brookline's J. Maurice Simons, better known as just Moe . . . He's to be manager of the unit, travel on to the coast and there Marge and Moe will continue to do things for Fanchon and Marco . . . The bridegroom has given up cotton-brokering to marry his one and only! . . . There was a big bunch of prenuptial festivities given to the unit over the week-end in New Haven by Tom Patricola—who's also uniting—and a Beacon-Streeter-About-Places . . . And if Fuzzy Taylor's fiance, Horst Obanowski, who played with the German Olympic team in Gotham last week, has to be in Germany for that match on March 15, looks like Fuzzy and "Obie" will give in to the parson this week, too! . . . But if fair Fuzzy gets frozen feet about it this time, the way she did New Year's Eve, 'twouldn't surprise us if the big "Tech" man will just straighten her out . . . Anyhow, she's always wanted to study painting in Munich and wants a peek at "Obie's" grandfather, who is an interesting Count over there!

'Bout Folks You've Heard Of

Reason Helen Morgan's intimates call her "Mousie" is because she always carries a troup of white mice with her, housing them in her dressing room, when show-trouping . . . When "Sweet Adeline" closed one of the mice died, with the entire company staging a very gay and lengthy wake! . . . Marie Dressler is "the wellest-sick woman" Polly Moran knows . . . It seems Marie always has to take to her couch after a big picture is finished, or after an especially trying day on the lot . . . Her imagination works wonders, claims Polly . . . Elderly Gus Hill, producer of "Jiggs and Maggie" road shows, still writes all his own letters in long hand and was seen, not long ago, pouring water in his ink-well . . . And wouldn't we like to dust off his money bags! . . .

By NICHOLAS YOUNG

Henrik Ibsen held himself to good account in his own generation—and the next. That he has been able to penetrate into this era of jazz and piffle and still arouse interest—even though chiefly among students—may be attributed in a large measure to Blanche Yurka. This ardent disciple has never wavered in her attachment to the old master of Nordland's grim tragedy. If "The Wild Duck" and "Hedda Gabler" make no urgent appeal to hot-blooded youth out for a night in the bright lights, they still are useful in a scholastic sense. Miss Yurka makes that clear in her repertory.

* * *

Blanche Yurka

And so, for the second week of her engagement at the Hollis, Miss Yurka drops back into her favorite role of Gina Ekdal, the distracted heroine of "The Wild Duck." It is no new task to Miss Yurka, as you can see at a glance. She favors the role by reason of long experience with it; and its demands, which would terrify an artist of less experience, are neatly dismissed with the flip of a hand or the toss of the head. There is no thrill in "The Wild Duck," and very little suspense, although there might have been both had Ibsen written for the modern theater instead of plodding away at good old Scandinavian literature. In these hours, it is the performance, not the play, that counts. Miss Yurka, you may be sure, proves faithful to her trust. But, of course, she is no stranger to it.

* * *

It is a bold gesture, indeed, for an artist of so excellent merit as Miss Yurka to cling so tenaciously to what the light hearted are inclined to refer to as the "arty" theater. But when you take into account its limitations, both in glory and reward, you are bound to acknowledge its manifold devotions. There are few in these days who will remember Miss Yurka as a comedienne of rich achievement, but she was exactly that. And she would be now had not the tricks of fate tipped the scales toward the more solemn side of dramatic expression. In any event, Miss Yurka gives quality to her performance in "The Wild Duck"—suppressed, stolid quality; an unobtrusive victim of the Ibsen school of frigid drama.

* * *

Outside the class room, Ibsen's clientele has been pared down to almost a vanishing point, yet there is something in Miss Yurka's performance in "The Wild Duck" that stirs the imagination and compels you, for an instant, to take note of its cruel realities. Miss Yurka's part in this, of course, is admirable; but you are also made aware of more than decent support. Dallas Anderson, perhaps, is inclined to jump around a bit and grow dramatic, but he is a forceful attendant upon the play's changing scenes. He is the essence of irresponsibility or despair as occasion demands. Robert Henderson, late of a local stage known as the Copley, lends aid that guarantees the completeness of Mr. Ibsen's tragedy.

* * *

"The Wild Duck," if you must be told, is not entertainment—it is hard, icy drama, mixed with a fair allowance of sin and set off by a half brained idiot who imagines he swings aloft the torch of virtue.

London Singers in Concert

By MOSES SMITH

The concert which John Goss and the London Singers gave in Symphony Hall last night before a good-sized audience was an enjoyable occasion apparently for everyone present—especially for the singers.

Good humor was the keynote. The program had been announced as one of "sociable" songs, and sociable the evening turned out to be, boresome as it had appeared in prospect. For Symphony Hall seemed too vast an auditorium in which performers might become intimate with listeners and onlookers. But, without descending to vulgarity, the singers underscored their texts and broadened their gestures sufficiently to compensate for distance.

The program contained sea chanteys of many nations, arrangements of folk-songs and old English pieces, sung by Mr. Goss and the quartet (though now and then one of them would play a piano accompaniment instead). The atmosphere was informal except for the singers' clothes. Many of the songs were of humorous content. Where there was sentiment it was light, almost mock in character. The voices of the performers were scarcely of outstanding quality, but they were pleasing, and the songs were admirably delivered.

Mr. Goss sang in addition a group of Schubert songs and another of folk songs. Beautiful as were his selections from Schubert, the lieder seemed out of place on the program.

The audience heartily applauded the performers, who added numbers to the announced program.

Anita Page Signs

Anita Page has been signed to a long-term contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Miss Page's motion picture career began with this company, several seasons ago and some of her outstanding successes were scored in "Telling the World," "The Broadway Melody," "Our Blushing Brides" and "Caught Short."

"Tarzan, the Ape Man"

Elephants are guided through the jungle by being tickled behind the ears! This trick in guiding the huge pachyderms had to be learned by Johnny Weissmuller, world's champion swimmer, who is playing the title role in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Tarzan, the Ape Man." He spent the first few days of the production on the back of one of the large animals tickling its ears with his toes!

Jordan Hall Concert

Ruth Posselt, young Boston violinist, for her concert in Jordan Hall on Wednesday evening, March 9, will play the "Goldmark Concerto." The "Intrada" by Desplanes-Nachez and the "Hungarian Dance" by Rachmaninoff will be played for the first time in Boston. The "Capriccietto" by Haydn-Burmester is another number.

Lionel Barrymore

Lionel Barrymore, playing a French detective in "Arsene Lupin," and pursuing his brother, John, who plays the master thief, looked curiously at a group of extras playing French gendarmes.

"It's a funny thing—they're all Germans and Italians—not a frog in a carload!" he grinned.

Bowdoin in Birthday Fete

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

Gala is the spirit of the Bowdoin Square Theater this week, for the house is celebrating its 40th birthday.

Al Somerby

Thoroughly modern in every respect, it doesn't look its years; it is as inviting as can be. Its modern equipment is up to date, and particularly good is its sound; its excellence in this respect is a striking feature, due to the perfect sound apparatus and the theater's acoustics. The house has a bang-up anniversary bill. On stage is a super-show of nine acts, introduced by Jimmie Downing, now in his eighth week as master of ceremonies. On screen are not only the "shorts," but two corking features—Marie Dressler in "Emma," and Douglas Fairbanks in his exceedingly interesting "Around the World in Eighty Minutes."

The Bowdoin is not only a veteran theater with a time-honored policy of good and generous shows, and good treatment of patrons, but it happens to have as manager one of the best liked of all theater executives. This is Al Somerby, who has been with the Bowdoin for 33 years, 27 years as manager.

The Bowdoin was built by Charles Atkinson, who built other Boston houses. It was in its first years a "legit" house. Later Dr. G. E. Lothrop took it over, changing the policy to dramatic stock. This remained until about 20 years ago, when movies were installed. But the Bowdoin still kept its stage show, and always has, thus being one of the oldest of all combination houses.

Manager somerby is distinctive in that he books all his acts and pictures personally—he sees them before he signs them up.

Circus Fall Feature of Film

What is reported to be one of the most breath-taking and spectacular circus falls ever filmed is one of the thrilling climaxes in Marion Davies' new starring vehicle, "Polly of the Circus," a Cosmopolitan production coming to Loew's State Friday.

A complete circus tent was erected at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios for the production with the stands of seats, rings in the center and at the very top a dizzy perch for the aerial acrobats. Miss Davies, as a member of the death-defying troupe, was required to swing through the air at a height of 80 feet from the ground to connect with another trapeze on the other side of the tent.

Special camera stands and microphone equipment were constructed on a large "boom" that followed Miss Davies as she swung through space. Part of the action required that she was to miss the trapeze as it swung toward the high platform when a loud yell in the audience distracts her attention. By special placing of the cameras above, below, and with the "boom" parallel with the star, a close-up is shown of her actually missing the bar and then the horrifying spectacle of a human form hurtling through the air to what looks like certain death!

"Brief Moment" Bought by Columbia; to Star Barbara Stanwyck

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Motion Picture Editor Universal Service
Copyright, 1932, by Universal Service, Inc.

Los Angeles, March 2—"Brief Moment" has been sought by several film companies. The bidding has ceased, we are told, and Columbia now finds itself in possession of this Sam Behrman play which has been a hit in New York. I surely thought another company would buy it from all that I heard Saturday, but what a difference a few hours make in this business.

Louella O. Parsons

In purchasing "Brief Moment," Columbia had Barbara Stanwyck in mind. What an actress this little Stanwyck gal is! They say in "So Big" she will be a sensation. I only saw the stills but they look interesting.

Frank Capra will probably direct and discussions on "Brief Moment" will be in order now that Walter Wanger is here and Harry Cohn has returned from week-ending at Palm Springs.

Plenty of Laughs

I am laughing. Eddie Quillan and Jimmy Durante in one picture. You will be laughing, too, if the two of them are as funny as they are expected to be in "It's Got to Be Good," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Hollywood picture. Eddie Quillan is under contract to Harold Lloyd but Harold is going to be so busy on his own picture that he won't have time to give his attention to a Quillan comedy for some time. A loan was therefore arranged between Harold and M. G. M.

* * *

Heard and Overheard

Seems there is some legal difficulty in obtaining an American divorce in Paris unless both husband and wife are present. That being the case there is a possibility that Norma Talmadge may go to Reno to obtain her divorce from Joseph Schenck. Malibu was all merry and gay on Sunday. Houses closed for the winter were opened. Many cases of sunburn are reported. Marie Prevost has taken off 15 pounds and looks simply gra-a-nd. Constance Bennett spent two hours trying to be stern mother to her young son Peter. She is teaching him to speak French. Mr. and Mrs. Will Hays motored to La Quinta for a quiet Sunday in the desert. Tom Mix and Hoot Gibson all but signed papers to stage a big rodeo, then something came up to make Tom change his mind.

Chance for Gloria

Marian Marsh

The flu has laid little Marian Marsh low. Arline Judge, too, has been quite sick with the same old demon. Seems as if I never heard of so many people at home sick. Marian Marsh's illness will prevent her from playing the second lead in Kay Francis' picture, "Street of Women." Gloria Stuart will, therefore, get her chance. She is the young actress recently signed by Universal and she has been borrowed by Warners. Anna May Wong's reason for leaving the cast of "The Roar of the Dragon" was because the story has been entirely rewritten. David Selznick felt that with Miss Wong and Gwili Andre in the cast it would be too much like "Shanghai Express." Miss Wong has gone to San Francisco to fill a vaudeville engagement.

* * *

Another New-Comer

Wonder how Helene Barclay escaped the eye of Irving Thalberg for "The Red-Headed Woman?" She looks like Billie Dove and she has red hair. Mrs. Barclay (yes, she is married), is the wife of McClelland Barclay, well-known artist. She is the subject of many of his most successful pictures and this is her first visit to Hollywood. A test of her was made by Warner Brothers in New York and she is here for a Warner picture. In spite of the fact that there is much talk about beauty being unnecessary on the screen you will find a girl with looks gets a break sooner than a plain girl.

New Mother Love Angle

Frances Dee

You can wager your last ten cents if "The Countess Auburn" has any kind of a story it will be good. I say that because those two excellent troupers, Richard Bennett and Alison Skipworth have put their names on the dotted line to play the leading character roles. The story is one of mother love. Be not discouraged. It is not the same old hokum. We are told the authors, Malcolm Stuart Boylan and Harvey H. Gates, have a new treatment and an entirely different approach from the old-time mother love drammers. Frances Dee and George Barbier are also slated for good parts.

Snapshots of Hollywood

Talk about famous Greek beauties, MRS. SPIRO SKOURAS fills that description. She, SPIRO and CHARLES SKOURAS were at the GEORGE ARCHAINBAUD party Saturday night. MRS. LIONEL BARRYMORE, who has been critically ill in the Pasadena Hospital, was reported better yesterday. CONSTANCE BENNETT and SALLY EILERS in a lengthy discussion on Paris models and American dressmakers. MRS. GARDNER SULLIVAN brought three gifts to JOAN BENNETT at the shower given her Saturday. JOAN took her pick, a rose silver picture frame. GENE MARKEY'S mother gave the bride-to-be a silver breakfast baking dish. Saturday was also JOAN'S birthday and GENE MARKEY gave an emerald bracelet. MRS. GEORGE FITZMAURICE relating how EDDIE KLINE came to her rescue when her car broke down. MRS. KLINE, at the luncheon, took bows on her husband's gallantry. MRS. MONSARRAT and GRANT MITCHELL entertaining the eminent scientist, DR. WILLIAM BEEBE, at a tea yesterday. BEBE DANIELS and BEN LYON in Philadelphia this week. That's all today. See you tomorrow!

STARS IN SCREEN EPIC

Renate Muller and Jack Hulbert have delightful roles in "Sunshine Susie," the new musical film which will have its American premiere at RKO Keith's tomorrow night.

Here's Sunshine Susie's Code for Success in Any Situation

Three pats with the puff; a tilt of the head; a wide smile; and plenty of spunk—that's Sunshine Susie's formula for success in any situation. She's the girl of romance in "Sunshine Susie," RKO Radio's international hit which starts its premiere American engagement at RKO Keith's at a special gala performance, tomorrow night at 9 o'clock.

It is in the role of charm who has her own way to make that Renate Muller, as "Sunshine Susie," makes her bow to American film audiences. A German stage beauty originally, she comes to vie for honors with her compatriot, Marlene Dietrich. Many predictions for her chances in achieving such popularity have been made by American film officials who saw her picture in preview.

"Sunshine Susie" makes further bid to fame because of its quality as well as quantity of entertainment packed into its eight reels. Besides the romance of its story and debut of its leading lady, three musical numbers of Viennese melody are introduced. Jack Hulbert, comedian, very much in the picture, affords laughs every time he appears, and the scene of the Rhythmic typists is new to screen novelty.

"Breakaway" Record

The all-time record for "breakaway" scenes was established at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios during the filming of "The Passionate Plumber," starring Buster Keaton. Over half a ton of light plaster statuary and dishes were broken during a fight scene in which the entire cast, including Jimmy (Schnozzle) Durante, Polly Moran, Irene Purcell, Gilbert Roland, and Mona Maris were required to throw missiles at each other.

Change in Policy of Beacon Theater

An important policy change in the Metropolitan district of Edward A. Zorn, of Publix Theaters, is announced today. Heretofore double feature attractions have been the rule at the Fenway and Modern. So successful has this policy been Publix, beginning Saturday next, will screen the same double bill at the Beacon, as well as at the Fenway and Modern. The first program has George Arliss in "The Man Who Played God," and "File No. 113," with Lew Cody, Mary Nolan and Clara Kimball Young.

Film Sets New House Record

That film gem, "Two Hearts in Waltz Time," ends its run at the Fine Arts next Sunday, after setting up a new record for the house. Its box office has proven the public's love for an exquisite film, supreme in its line. It did well on its first appearance here, but is far ahead on its second visit.

Manager George Kraska informs us that many of his patrons have seen the picture two or more times and that several have gotten the "Two Hearts" habit and appear every day. There are three persons who sit through two shows each day; one of these, a woman, has never failed to see the manager after the close, to repeat:

"I enjoyed it more tonight than I did last night."

Stage Who's Who

John Butler, who is drawing praise for his breezy portrayal of a flippant Broadway columnist in "Happy Landing," the Professional Players' current offering at the Plymouth, is a Canadian.

John Butler

No one in his family before him had ever trod the boards, but that fact did not deter John when he made his decision to be the first of his clan to enter the theatrical profession.

"Brown of Harvard" was the first play. In far-off London he appeared later in "College Widow" and "Three of Us." His next step was back to New York.

LINDY CASE ONE OF GREATEST IN CRIME HISTORY

New York, March 2 (INS)—Kidnaping of the baby of Col and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh probably is the most sensational crime of modern history next to the assassinations of President Lincoln and President McKinley.

Because the world had been more thrilled by the birth of the famous baby on June 22, 1930, than by the nativity of any other child in generations, the news of his abduction aroused public interest and sympathy everywhere.

Even the famous kidnaping of Charley Ross, 4, of Philadelphia, did not command the same farspread alarm, though the boy was the object of a nationwide search for years. The mystery of his disappearance was never solved.

FAMOUS ROSS CASE

The boy, one of a number of children of celebrated parents to be kidnaped in the last century, was the son of a Philadelphia merchant. On July 1, 1874, he was enticed from his Germantown home by two men in a buggy who promised him toys.

Christian K. Ross, the boy's father, co-operated with police which mobilized in the search throughout the continent, but no clue to his whereabouts ever proved successful.

Great public indigation was roused also by the abduction of Edward Cudahy son of Edward A. Cudahy, wealthy Omaha meat packer in 1900. The strange circumstances surrounding the case made it one of absorbing interest for years.

PAID $25,000 RANSOM

The elder Cudahy, shortly after his son was taken from his home, received a letter demanding $25,000 ransom. He paid the money by placing it in a designated spot, and his boy, unharmed, was restored to his home.

There was an echo of the affair a few years later, when Pat Crowe confessed to the abduction. But his trial ended in a verdict of "not guilty," although scores of persons identified him in court as the kidnaper. Crowe afterward turned reformer.

Marian Parker, 12, daughter of a Los Angeles banker, Perry M. Parker, fell victim to a brutal abductor who eventually was convicted of killing the little girl and hanged.

She was seized by a strange man while on her way home from school one day in 1927. Her father, shortly afterwards, received a note asking $1500 ransom. The message was signed "The Fox."

GIRL SLAYER EXECUTED

Parker met the writer by appointment and paid the money. A few hours later the mutilated body of his daughter was left at his home. William Hickman, bank messenger, was executed for the crime.

A dramatic exploit was the kidnaping of 8-year-old Willie Whitla, Sharon, Pa., son of a lawyer, in 1909.

After the father paid $10,000 ransom to an old woman he met by appointment in a store, he was told to meet his boy in Cleveland the next day. Willie, disguised by dark glasses, stepped off a street car at the designated place there.

No trace of the perpetrators of the kidnaping were found.

Many abductions of children in recent years were never solved. Blakeley Coughlin, 4, Morristown, Pa., has been missing since 1920. Nor were traces found of Raimonde von Maluski, 3, stolen from his New York home in 1925, or of Billy Gaffney, 4, Brooklyn, who disappeared in 1927.

SHIPS TO STAY IN HONOLULU

Washington, March 2 (INS)—Fears of renewed trouble in Honolulu, following the recent assault of Mrs. John Hope, wife of a naval machinist, prompted the Navy Department today to revoke orders that had been issued for ten naval vessels to leave Hawaii nad join in the maneuvers in the San Pedro-San Diego area.

The vessels to be retained at Honolulu are mostly mine layers and mine sweepers and have an enlisted personnel of more than 1000 men.

The Navy also instructed 16 submarines to return to their Honolulu base from San Pedro on March 23 instead of May 13. Machinist Hope, husband of the latest woman attacked, is attached to one of these submarines.

Road Bill Approved

Washington, March 2 (AP)—Increased by $3,500,000 and providing that states may fix minimum wages, the Democratic Emergency Road Fund bill was approved today by the Senate postoffice committee. It now totals $136,000,000.

London Excited by Kidnaping

London, March 2 (INS)—London newspapers gave wide prominence today to the kidnaping of Charles A. Lindbergh's baby.

The Evening News ran two full columns of details on page one, an extraordinary display for an American story in an English newspaper.

The news stressed the American "kidnaping racket," which it declared made it necessary for extreme precautions to be taken to protect wealthy American children.

BEER 'FLOOD' IN RHODE ISLAND

Providence, R. I., March 2 (INS)—"Schooners" of pre-prohibition beer, with foam flowing over the side, passed over the counter today as the bar and brass rail returned to Rhode Island.

"Little Rhody," for many years the stormy petrel of dry enforcement, for the first time since prohibition was without a "Baby Volstead" law, and there were but seven federal agents on the job to stem the tide of imported beer which flooded the state.

The situation came about when Gov. Case attached his signature to the legislative bill repealing the Sherwood Act for state enforcement, legalizing 3.75 per cent beer and tying the hands of state enforcement officers.

Watertown Men Held in Maine Car Theft

Portland, Me., March 2 (AP)—Four Watertown, Mass., men were detained by police today after they had sold an automobile alleged to have been stolen in Cambridge two weeks ago. They gave their names as Richard F. Lopez, Raymond J. Lopez, a boxer; John Felloni, Jr., and Pasquale Rossi.

ALL ST. LOUIS IN PRAYER FOR LINDY'S BABY

By ROBERT A. HEREFORD
International News Service Staff Correspondent

St. Louis, March 2 (INS)—St. Louis, known as Lindy's home town, had a double interest today in the abduction of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh's baby.

In the world news of recent years, principally because it sponsored Lindbergh and his trans-Atlantic flight, and because of the infamous kidnaping racket which it is now attempting to wipe out, the city today found that fate had whimsically joined its two chief bids to fame in one of the biggest stories of newspaper history.

Col. Lindbergh's host of friends here grieved with him in his anxiety and fervently hoped for the best. The man on the street who has known Lindy as the city's idol, his flying buddies of his air mail days at Lambert-St. Louis Flying Field, and the influential men who backed his ocean flight, all voiced a prayer for the safety of Lindy's baby.

The sensational abduction gave a grim new impetus to the war on kidnaping being waged by Lindy's home city.

St. Louis sounded its warning gun in its war on kidnapings two weeks ago when a local jury sent Charles Heuer to prison for 99 years for his participation in the kidnaping of Alexander Berg, millionaire furrier. Five others are under indictment in connection with the crime.

President Walter Weisenburger, of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce, and Chief of Police Gerk went to Washington last week to put their influence behind the kidnap bills being sponsored by Rep. Cochran and Senator Patterson of Missouri.

and Yarbley, Pa. I don't know how important they are but we are clutching at every straw."

Lindbergh was dressed in a leather jacket, an old cap, and a worn pair of gray trousers. His shoes were muddy from tramping around his estate in search of clues.

In the early hours of this morning a truck driver, arriving at Philadelphia, reported that he had seen a blanket-wrapped bundle "that looked like a baby doll" lying in a ditch beside the roadway a mile and a half from the Lindbergh place. State police, who immediately searched the entire area, reported they were unable to find any such bundle.

FIND MARK OF WOMAN'S SHOE

Maj. Charles Schoeffel of the state police said the tracks of the kidnapers started from the west side of the Lindbergh home and were traced a distance of two miles.

There were several crossroads, he said, where a car might have picked them up, but he would not say if tracks of a car that migh thave been used had been found. All roads were so cut up by the visiting automobiles after the alarm was spread that it was impossible to distinguish tire marks.

The police flashed the alarm of the kidnaping over their statewide automatic printer. Princeton police reported that a few hours before the kidnaping took place two men in a dark sedan stopped a highway worker and inquired directions to the Lindbergh home.

LINDBERGH SAVED FROM REPORTERS

The kidnaping was discovered at 10 p. m. The baby's nurse, Betty Gow, had put him to bed at 7:30. When she returned to the nursery there was only a heap of disordered blankets in the crib.

She rushed screaming down stairs to the dining room and told the colonel and his wife, eating a late dinner, what had happened.

Col. Lindbergh immediately telephoned the state police and the news of the kidnaping was broadcast to police in New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania.

The search of the ground of the estate yielded a scant handful of clues to the kidnapers, who had worked with such quiet and stealthy dispatch that the five adults in the house were never aware of what was happening in the nursery upstairs.

The nursery, which is filled with every device for childish pleasure, is situated in the right hand corner of the second floor front and faces on the private roadway. The open window through which the kidnapers entered is 30 feet from the ground.

A cordon of police was thrown about the Lindbergh estate early today to keep out the hundreds of private cars which sped there after hearing of the kidnaping. Roads for miles around were snarls in a hopeless traffic jam.

WINDOWS LEFT UNLOCKED

Both the nursery windows were unlocked. The shutters of the windows are usually locked, but last night both Mrs. Lindbergh and the nurse had failed to lock one of them. The catch would not work. The balky shutter was on the window which the man used to reach the baby's crib.

And through that unprotected window the hand of tragic crime reached in to steal the sleeping baby while the parents, unsuspecting any harm, enjoyed a late supper on the floor below.

LEFT NO FINGERPRINTS

The search for the flier's son was extended into the air today. Authorities asked the Ludington Air Lines for a plane and a big tri-motored ship was immediately dispatched from Newark airport with Fred Davis, a veteran pilot, at the controls.

Col. Lindbergh's comrades of the air also found it impossible to stand idle while tragedy hung over him. The Quiet Birdmen, a secret flying organization of which Col. Lindbergh is a member, organized a search party, with headquarters at Newark, the New York city municipal airport and the Aviation Country Club at Hicksville, Long Island. Plans were made to send a score of planes, some of them under control of world famous airmen, hurtling over the dense woodland of Sourland Mountain in an effort to ferret out the hideaway of the kidnapers.

ELY DELIVERS THE FIRST BLOW FOR AL SMITH

By JOHN T. LAMBERT

Manchester, N. H., March 2—"We stood by him in 1928, when he couldn't win. Let's stand by him in 1932, when he's sure to win."

With that optimistic slogan thrown into the campaign by Governor Joseph B. Ely, of Massachusetts, the Democratic leaders of the Granite State stood by today to contemplate the outcome of the battle between Alfred E. Smith and Franklin D. Roosevelt.

ELY FIRES OPENING GUN

It is a battle. The Smith people threw their shock troops in two great rallies—the first sign of the Smith onslaught—in this city and in Nashua.

Here in New Hampshire was launched an active drive for Smith within 12 hours of his authorization to the Democratic leaders of Massachusetts to make an aggressive campaign in his behalf for the presidential nomination.

"Don't be misled by false and artful propaganda," Governor Ely warned both audiences. "If Governor Smith is a candidate in Massachusetts—and he is—he is also a candidate in New Hampshire."

The Smith movement here is headed by County Solicitor John L. Sullivan, Sheriff John F. Dowd, Maurice F. Devine of the American Legion, Governor's Councillor Powers and the younger element within the party that recently gave to Manchester its first Democratic administration in ten years and aided materially in winning the Congressional election for Congressman "Billy" Rogers.

"The Democrats of New Hampshire," said Sullivan, "are not going to be led or misled by self-appointed leaders who started to deliver this State many months ago."

ROOSEVELT NOT MENTIONED

"If they left themselves out on a limb by their desertion of the man who was their idol in 1928, if they elected to abandon him before he made known the decision of his intentions, that is their hard luck. And it is not the obligation of the Democratic voters of New Hampshire to rescue them from their personal embarassment.

"More is at stake than that. We are a nation floundering about, devoid of leadership and bankrupt of ideas. The country looks to the Democratic party to furnish the leadership. It is given to us to lead the way with the candidate of experience."

Governor Ely made no mention of the name of Roosevelt. But some, in the audience, assumed his reference to the New York Governor in this statement:

"In one school of political thought we find the men who are successful because of their cleverness in being all things to all people, cautious and equivocal in stating their attitude on public questions. They are all things to all men."

He placed Governor Smith in the political field of decision, firmness and frankness.

RALLIES CROWDED

It was not in the cards for Smith to win four years ago, he said. The public was misled by the promises of "two cars in every garage and a chicken in every pot. Despite the handicap of prosperity and despite the handicap of intolerance, Smith polled more votes than any other candidate in the history of the country except Hoover, according to the Bay State governor. With things as they are, he can win, according to his prediction.

The size of the Smith rallies was a surprise to Ely and a source of gratification to the Smith followers. Rita Hall in this city and Goodrich Hall in Nashua were both packed to the doors.

Governor Ely advocated the nomination of Smith pledged delegates also in a speech which he made over New Hampshire's first and only radio station, dedicated here today. He was presented to the audience of the air by Mayor Damase Caron of this city.

The primary election will be held next Tuesday. Both Roosevelt and Smith have complete tickets in the field. Its outcome will command national attention.

BOY KIDNAPED IN NILES, O.

The boy was driven off by two men in a small brown coupe, Anna May Mellina, 12, of Ashtabula, cousin of the boy, told the police.

James fought off the kidnapers once when they grabbed him, Anna May told police. They clutched him again after he broke away and drove off.

The girl said they were crossing a vacant lot and noticed the brown coupe. One of the men had the hood up. He asked the children if they knew where De Jute lived. They told him. Then, she said, the kidnapers asked the boy if he were the contractor's son.

18 More Prsioners Sent to Norfolk

Eighteen prisoners were transferred from State Prison in Charlestown to the Norfolk Prison Colony, today. The transfer reduces the population at the State Prison to 867 men, of whom 147 are "lifers."

2 TRAPPERS AID COLONEL

Hopewell, N. J., March 2 (AP)—At the request of Col. Lindbergh, two hunters and trappers who have lived all their lives in the mountainous area, assisted him and the police today in their attempt to find clues.

The men are James Wyckoff and Oscar Bush of the village of Zion, three miles northeast of here. Wyckoff and two troopers penetrated the deep woods.

Bush left in an automobile with Col. Lindbergh and one trooper at 7:30 a. m. and drove toward Flagtown. Wyckoff told reporters that Bush and the colonel were going to "look up some moonshiners" and see if they knew anything of the kidnaping.

CHINESE ARMY IS ROUTED

vance under a heavy pall of smoke from fires left by the retreating Chinese army.

JAPS NEAR CHENJU

Chinese troops began abandoning Woosung and the Japanese Ninth Division reached Chenju, northwest of Chapei.

Chenju was the headquarters of Gen. Tsai Ting-Kai head of the Chinese Nineteenth route army during the Shanghai defense and is only three miles from Nanziang to which the Chinese commander had retired to establish a new line.

It was announced the Chinese would continue their stubborn defense at Nanziang if attacked, and await developments of the peace negotiations.

If this line fails the Chinese intend to withdraw to their third line based on Soochow.

The Chinese apparently have little ammunition. Throughout the day few Chinese shells were observed bursting in the Japanese ranks though the Nipponese guns kept up a steady bombardment.

Thousands of newly arrived infantry from Japan were thrown into line on the northern end of the fighting front. They broke through Chinese resistance west of Kiangwan and entered Tachang without serious fighting.

SHIRAKAWA IN COMMAND

The entire operation is under the direction of Gen. Shirakawa, who arrived yesterday from Japan to assume command.

Observers believed Gen. Tsai's retreat was necessary because, in the face of heavy Japanese reinforcements and the reported drive down from Liuho, at the north, he still had not received reinforcements of a single troop from the Nanking government.

Chinese headquarters described the withdrawal as "strategic," and said it was in no way disorderly, but saved the defenders from facing the heavy Japanese reinforcements in battle.

The new Japanese forces advancing from Liuho were those of the 11th division. They were expected to cut in toward the east and help press the Chinese inland on their retreat.

The Chinese evacuation began at noon as the North Station area was deserted. The troops moved southward along the International Settlement boundary guarded by American Marines, and then retreated inland along the railway.

Similar withdrawals were under way from the other Chinese positions, including those in the Kiangwan area.

The day began with the heaviest artillery duel of the entire conflict. Chinese guns opened a terrific fire upon the heavy Japanese artillery posts in Hongkew park, and these heavy Japanese guns replied with the aid of the Japanese guns in Kiangwan.

HEAVY CASUALTIES.

This heavy fighting had died down before the Chinese retreat was begun, however, and the retreat was not attributed directly to it. The artillery duel lasted for about an hour.

Japanese headquarters announced heavy casualties in the fighting yesterday and last night.

Jap Warships Cut Off Chinese Reinforcements

Nanking, China, March 2 (AP)—Japanese warships today checked efforts to rush reinforcements to the retreating 19th Route Army at Shanghai and several divisions concentrated north of here were unable to proceed.

There were two cruisers and four destroyers in the Japanese squadron at Nanking, and smaller vessels were cruising along the river on both sides of the city. Their commanders warned that they would bombard any troops attempting to cross the river.

More Work for Collector

A proposal to increase the duties of the tax collector to include collection of all money due the town, will be considered at the Watertown meeting, March 15.

TAX BILL TO PUT U. S. ON AN EVEN KEEL RUSHED

Washington, March 2 (AP)—The big new revenue bill which is to raise more than a billion dollars a year for the federal Government, in addition to its present income, has been completely drawn and will be ready for the House by Saturday.

Acting Chairman Crisp presented the draft today to the full ways and means committee after a subordinate group had whipped it together, including a two per cent manufactures sales tax to yield about $525,000,000, special excise levies on selected industries to produce $300,000,000, and increases in income, estate and gift taxes to bring in an additional $200,000,000.

Crisp hoped to get committee action done by Saturday, start debate in the House next Monday and speed the measure to the Senate. The bill will carry several changes in administration to stop leaks by which it is estimated the government loses $100,000,000 annually. It will not quite balance the budget submitted to Congress by the President, but the House Democrats, Crisp said, are calculating a saving of $125,000,000 in government expenses.

If it materializes and the revenue bill gives the expected yield, the government will find itself on an even keel again at the end of the fiscal year 1933.

WILL THE MACHINES PAY INCOME TAXES OF MEN WHOSE JOBS THEY TAKE?

By ROBERT E. ROGERS

BETWEEN NOW AND MARCH 15 we shall have, I suppose, the usual crop of jokes and cartoons about the income tax. Pictures of harassed and domestic men littering the floor with sheets of papers on which are scrawled complex calculations. Jokes, some of them too serious, alas!—about men paying through the nose for paper profits which they have since lost. And particularly jokes about the income tax form, which is, after all, not really so complicated and so absurd. Whether Dr. Watson is right or wrong about his theory of conditioned reflexes, it certainly applies to cartoonists, columnists and joke-smiths generally. Otherwise, the jokes would not be the same year after year.

PROF. ROGERS

I am disappointed to observe that one of our monthly contemporaries, of which we are hearing a good deal lately, has not had the wit to link up the income tax joke with the bath-tub, the out-house, the bedroom, and other settings for that magazine's characteristic humor. But of course there is no oblique advertising in that!

Letter Supplies Food for Thought

One of my correspondents, a very rare bird in that he signs his name, sends me the following which strikes me as pungent and true enough to be shared with the rest of you. The man may be hurt and angry, but his letter is good-humored, witty, and therefore, effective.

"This is not the age of machines but the age of 'Robots.' That is, mechanical contraptions that do everything but the main essential thing; THINK. These robots are designed, installed and intended to eliminate not human labor, but human intelligence, and our present conditions of pauperization proclaim that they have done so.

"My job enabled me to file a state and federal income tax report each year and this I have done for many years. When a robot relieved me of my job I assured the machine that in assuming my job it must also assume my responsibilities, especially in the matter of filing an income tax report each year, that the government may not lose this money which is rightfully due it. I cannot, however, seem to make the machine understand this essential which was a necessary portion of my job.

"From the fact that there is now a three billion dollar deficit in government taxes, I am inclined to believe that ALL these robots neglect this essential and thus keep from the government the money which is rightfully due it. As I am but one of the many million individuals whose jobs have been thus 'assumed' by the robots, does it not naturally follow that these machines owe Uncle Sam quite a little change;—Somewhere in the vicinity of three billion dollars?

"These robots continue their assumption of tax-paying jobs and their denial of tax-paying responsibilities, and, as they are but in their industrial infancy, it does not require a knowledge of the higher mathematics to figure out that the three billion dollar deficit is but a starter. Do you not think, my dear professor, that it is about time for the government to interest itself in the Industrial Don Quixote and his bony, spavined steed, the machines?"

This letter is a neat and sardonic way of saying that in the future taxes must be assumed more and more by Big Business. The author, who signs himself "Pro Bono," no doubt recognizes the fact that the suggestion comes almost too late, when the machines have destroyed the business as well as the job. The time to have pressed for heavier taxes on business profits was in those shameful and extravagant days when the sky was the limit, when profits were going up and taxes were coming down, when business was charging us usury and we were scrambling to buy at such prices as the world has never seen before. Then was the time to suggest that Business might equitably bear the burden out of its triple profits.

Business Tune Has Changed

But those days were the days when the theory was that in Big Business lay all the hope of the American people. "Praise Business from whom all blessings flow" was the hymn tune of the administration. And since business was the fount of prosperity therefore Business must not be mulcted of taxes. Taxes must be paid by the people out of their abundance, an abundance created by Business.

So the opportunity passed. The machines created Business, the machines abolished jobs; the machines ruined Business.

"The machines gave and the machines have taken away; blessed be the name of the machines!"

But my correspondent forgets the other part of the theory. No matter how many machines are out of work, American inventiveness and ingenuity will create new occupations, which will take up all the slack in all the unemployment, so that plenty will return once more—that is, until the new industry becomes mechanized and the dreary vicious circle begins again.

But what of the Unions? We are told that they are powerful in America. We know from our own experience how powerful they are. Yet they have not been powerful enough to take care of their own people thrown out of work by the Robots. At this moment the theater operators of New York city threaten to discontinue their theater orchestras, because the musicians' union—perhaps unwisely—is trying to keep players of instruments from acting as entertainers also. There is no doubt that their insistence that an orchestra must consist of a certain number of pieces, playing under specified conditions, was instrumental—no pun intended!—in throwing musicians out of work. If the unions are not able to halt the forward march of the machine, to whom else may we turn?

Fifty years ago the proposal to tax a business in proportion to the number of machines it employs would have been called a return to the dark ages. Even today, Business will say the same. But after all, it is not impossible that we are in the dark ages now and will abide there for a considerable time. It is not impossible that just such a brake on progress as a return to the handcrafts might save us. It may be that the tempo we have been trying for over the past generation is beyond human endurance. It may be that the men of a hundred years ago, who vainly tried to destroy the machines, were wiser than anyone guessed at the time. Taxing the machines may be the lever which will roll depression out of the road.

A. H. LOVERING WITNESS IN BANK CASE

Tells More About Fees Paid to Officials of Closed Medford Trust Company

Lewis H. Lovering, 84, a resident of Medford for 77 years and the city's third mayor, today testified in Middlesex Superior Court as a defense witness for Edwin T. McKnight, president of the Medford Trust Co., who is charged with receiving commissions illegally.

Frank W. Lovering, son of the frail old man who told his story today, is on trial with McKnight but not on this charge. Ex-Mayor Lovering is under indictment in the bank case but is not on trial.

In a low voice he corroborated the testimony of other directors of the bank that on June 26, 1928, they voted to sell certificates of deposit bearing five per cent interest and to pay two per cent commission to all officers and employes who sold the certificates.

McKNIGHT QUIZZED

The government alleges such commissions were illegal. The vote of the directors was never entered on the records, according to a previous witness.

The examination of McKnight on the stand [illegible] today with questions regarding loan of certificates of deposit which the indicted president denied.

"Do you recall Frankini Brothers (Medford contractors) getting a loan from the bank of $15,000, of which $10,000 was in cash and $5000 in a certificate of deposit?" asked Asst. Dist. Atty. William G. Andrew.

"No," said McKnight.

McKnight said the issuance of certificate of deposit was made in three series. He could not recall any vote of the directors authorizing any except the first series, but did not think this important.

Pointing an accusing finger at McKnight, Andrew asked him why when he was receiving a salary of $10,000 as president, he accepted a commission for selling certificates of deposits.

McKnight replied that the fee was credited to him because the directors had authorized its payment to all attaches of the bank who sold the certificates.

TURNED CASH INTO BANK

The former president of the Massachusetts Senate testified that he never received a cent of the commission but applied it to liquidation of "an error" of the bank in making a loan of $12,500 to the late Daniel J. Cerussi, a builder.

Revelations cropping out piecemeal, regarding the Cerussi mortgage proved the major sensation to date. Frequent allusions to it had been made by Frank Lovering when he took the witness stand in McKnight's defense in combating the indictment accusing the head of the bank with illegally accepting fees in 14 counts.

APPROVED BY HOVEY

McKnight said Commissioner Hovey approved both the issuance of such certificates and payment of the commission to officers of the bank. When he reported this to the directors they unanimously decided on the plan.

Testimony relative to the Cerussi mortgage showed that the builder borrowed $12,500 from the Medford Trust Company in 1926, the note to run six months and the interest to be 6 per cent on $2000 and 8 per cent on the balance. Cerussi erected an apartment house on Cerdan ave., West Roxbury, but it was not learned until after his death in April 14, 1928, that he had built the building on the wrong lot.

Lola Told Eunice of Her Fears

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

At 11:30 on New Year's Eve, Police Commissioner Thatcher Colt arrives at the exclusive Mayfair Club in response to a mysterious summons from District Attorney Merle Dougherty. The latter informs Colt he believes Lola Carewe, known as "The Night Club Lady," widow of Gaylord Gifford, the cotton millionaire, is the "higher-up" responsible for numerous jewel robberies perpetrated recently which baffle the police. Lola tells Colt her life is threatened. He takes up the case and surrounds her apartment with a police guard; but in spite of this Lola is found stricken on the floor of one of the rooms. Colt suspects poison in her death, which follows. Eunice, the maid, gives startling facts to Colt.

NOW READ ON—

"LOLA AND Miss Christine were both scared of one man—she told me so," Eunice disclosed. "He was an actor boy friend of hers—Guy Everett—the fellow who took Miss Christine out tonight."

"But why should they be afraid of Mr. Everett?" pursued Dougherty.

"Miss Christine called him a hypo—hypo—something or other."

"A hypochondriac?"

"He was always down in the mouth, always tired out, she said, always holding his hand to his belt and making a face."

"And she actually told you she was afraid of him?"

"Sure. She told me how she and Miss Carewe advised him about some investments. On account of taking her advice, he lost all his money. Miss Christine was always afraid he would try to get even with her and Miss Lola."

STARTLING ANGLE

"How long ago did she [illegible] that with you?"

"Just the other day."

Here was a startling new angle. Lola Carewe and Christine Quires, her [illegible] friend, had advised Everett about his investment. Where could [illegible] that lead us? Colt might have followed this up directly, but he was too shrewd [illegible] such a blunder. Instead he boldly switched the course of his examination.

"Do you know anything about the relations between Doctor Baldwin and Miss Carewe?" asked Dougherty suddenly.

The maid opened her eyes very wide.

"Hear anything that was said?"

"Well—Doctor Baldwin said plenty. He told Miss Lola his life was ruined if she told what they knew."

"You heard that?"

"Oh, yes, sir—I heard it!"

"Hear anything else?"

"Not that I remember just now, sir!"

"Where was this quarrel?"

EVERETT ARRIVES

"About two months ago, I guess."

A knocking was heard at the door. It was one of Flynn's men with the message that Mr. Guy Everett had arrived in company with a detective.

"Show him in at once," directed Thatcher Colt, dismissing the maid with a word of thanks. On the threshold stood the actor who was to be our next witness—and one about whom she had just given us startling information. Was I mistaken—or did a glance of understanding pass between them?

Guy Everett was a tall and handsome middle-aged man with a slightly gray mustache. Outside of the elevator boy here was the last person known to have seen Christine Quires, the friend of the murdered Lola, and whose disappearance was already one of the grave and [illegible] factors in this mystery. Mr. Everett seemed to be in a pitiful mental condition. The man was shaken by intermittent tremors, his bluish lips actually seemed puffed out with fear, and his eyes rolled as if out of gear, his features no longer under control.

"Mr. Colt," he burst out passionately, "why am I not told what has happened? Where is Miss Carewe—or Miss Quires?"

"Mr. Everett," said Thatcher Colt, "how long have you known Lola Carewe?"

"About three years, I suppose—she is an old friend of mine."

"Were you attracted to her?"

"Well, I don't know exactly what

CLOSED TRUST CO.'S IN PROBE

State investigation of closed trust companies subsidiary to the closed Federal National Bank of Boston was indicated today.

Dist. Atty Bishop of Middlesex County announced the attorney general had asked him to assign a man to co-operate in such an inquiry.

When Atty. Gen Warner was asked about it, he replied:

"If and when there is anything to say, I'll say it. There may be nothing to say."

Several trust companies outside of Boston closed after the Federal National shut its doors due to their connection with the Boston institution. The only one in Middlesex County, Bishop said, was the Inman Trust Co. of Cambridge. Two national banks affiliated with the Federal also closed, but the state has no jurisdiction over these.

All Boston Phones American About Lindy's Baby

Hundreds called the Boston Evening American switchboard in the space of a few hours today to inquire about the kidnaped baby son of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh.

"Has the Lindbergh baby been found?"

"Has Lindy's baby been found?"

"Have they found the baby yet?"

In every form imaginable the query poured into the ears of the operators. It seemed as if everybody in Greater Boston wanted to know just one thing today.

"Gee, that's too bad," one girl said when told the child was still missing, and in one form or another that was the comment of all.

POLICE RAIDERS' SLEDGE HAMMERS WRECK REVERE CLUB

DEL GROSSO IN HIDING, PLANS TO GIVE UP

Raid Also Shatters the Last Friendship Tie Between Proprietor and Mayor

Sledge hammers, axes and tear gas bombs blasted away the Revere Country Club early today, and with it the long-standing friendliness between Mayor Andrew A. Casassa and "Joey" Del Grosso, reputed field marshal of the mayor's forces in the election of November, 1930.

When the Revere police got through with Joe's place on Broadway at Davis st. there wasn't much left but a skeleton of the merry rendezvous and less than a skeleton of the spirit of camaraderie that once existed, according to Joe, between the mayor and himself.

Del Grosso, known familiarly as Joe Ross, is in hiding today while Revere police are seeking him with a warrant for assault and battery upon two Revere police officers.

The warrant and the police drive on the club date back to Monday night when Lieut. Carroll A. Davis and Patrolman Daniel Sullivan crashed the door of Joe's place and were met by a two-fisted counter-attack by Joe in person.

Not only did Joe inflict severe punishment on the Revere officers but he took their guns away and still has them in his keeping.

Aroused by this affront to police dignity the Revere department, headed by Chief Edward J. Hughe[illegible] descended on the Country Club early today and laid siege to the place with tear bombs and axes.

First they invaded the club itself and after pounding the piano to pieces with sledge hammers turned their attention to the radio and other furnishings. The police reduced everything worth while to kindling, threw a few gas bombs in the vacant drummer's stand and departed for the Del Grosso home next door. At the home they came across two of Joe's brothers whom they took into custody.

Then the police laid siege to the home. They ripped the beds apart [illegible] of the dwelling.

JOE STILL MISSING

But they didn't find Joe. He had fled from the scene several [illegible] with [illegible] knuckles and two police revolvers. From a hiding place in Boston today he announced that the whole thing started over a little disagreement between he and Mayor Casassa.

"I can't understand the attitude that Gus has taken," said Joe. He calls the mayor "Gus" from the old days when things were harmonious, he said.

"Gus and I were pals in the old days when he was running for mayor," Joe continued. "I was such a good pal that Gus came to me weeks before election and asked me to give him a lift.

"Well, I came to the front for him o. k. I put 35 cars at the polling booths for Gus, and that isn't counting the Keeves cars that developed motor and tire trouble after we got on the job.

CASASSA PRESENT

"Anyway Gus became mayor. And naturally I thought he'd return the favor. So I opened a place. A little golf course, you understand.

"After the golf fans start to gather I got this Primo Carnera down to try the place out. The Mayor came down and me and Primo and the Mayor all had our pictures taken. Friends, you know, the Mayor and me and Carnera.

"Then I tell him I'm going to go after a charter for a country club and everything looks O. K. Well, you could knock me over with a right cross to the left hip when I learn that Gus has voted against it.

ONLY A PARTY

"Anyway, I open up and the coppers come down, Lieutenant Davis and the others and the Mayor himself. And the Mayor says, while he has his right hand in his pocket: 'What kind of joint are you running here?'

"And I says, 'A birthday party, Mr. Mayor.'

"Then I asked him what was the matter—didn't he send the word down it was O. K. to open up? And he puts the shush on me and tells me not to talk about such things with these people around.

"Well, I told him there was only Red and myself there to listen and we are all friends. But he says I shouldn't talk so much and I closed up. I mean I closed up my mouth and also the joint.

CLUB OPENED AGAIN

"Two weeks ago I get the word again that it's all-right to open up and the same night I turn on the lights this Lieutenant Davis comes up and wants to know what is the idea.

"And I told him he shouldn't think I'm a fool to open without it was O. K.'d. And he tells me he didn't hear anything about any O. K. Anyway two weeks more go by and Davis comes up again seeing two cars was parked outside the joint.

"I asked him didn't he hear anything. And he says no and he tells me I'm not going to run. And I says that nobody's going to stop me. And I tell him if he ever comes to visit the place he'd better have a warrant.

POLICE EVEN THE REVERE BEATING SCORE

The necessity of being a regular reader of the Boston Evening American becomes more apparent day by day—that is if you would get news that is news when it's news. Four outstanding news beats were handed to our readers yesterday. The American was first to tell of the death by monoxide gas of Col. Terrell M. Ragan, bank president and military aide to Governor Ely, in his Roxbury garage. On the first page of this paper came the first news that "Big" Ed Morris, pitcher of the Boston Red Sox had been stabbed at Brewton, Alabama. The thrilling announcement that Al Smith had authorized supporters to put his name on the Massachusetts ballot was given to you by this paper long before other papers knew of the important political turn. Then last but not least, we presented the only pictures shown of the four-masted schooner George W. Elzey, Jr., sinking in Nantucket Sound. You may depend on seeing news first in the American.

It Is Expected that the New Telescope With the Great 200-Inch Reflector Will Bring the Moon to Your Dooryard—That Is, It Will Clarify and Make Any Object on the Surface of Our Satellite So That It Pictures Being Observed With the Naked Eye Seem to Be Within a Few Hundred Feet of the Observers

To Reveal The MOON'S SECRETS!

ASTRONOMERS now alive may soon be able to answer many secrets that the moon still hides from man. A new super-telescope is now being built that is 3[illegible] times more efficient than the human eye. It is provided with a reflector twice as wide as the present greatest telescope.

Do you want to know where this giant [illegible] instrument will be installed? Do you know why it is now possible to build such a huge telescope although scientists thought, for a long time, that it was impossible? And, do you know that telescopes do not really magnify? These questions—and many more—are answered in the unusual article about the new super-telescope appearing in next Sunday's American Weekly. Don't miss it!

EVERY WOMAN WANTS A SLICE OF 'APPEAL'

By HELEN ROWLAND

ABILITY, aptitude, appeal [illegible] APPEAL.

• • •

• • •

What IS appeal? [illegible]

WHAT IS APPEAL?
"I'D LIKE A LOT!"

"Appeal," says Mr. Brisbane, "is the power to interest the public by force of personality. The vulgar, outworn 'sex-appeal' is not meant. Nor is mere physical beauty."

• • •

[illegible] HURT a woman [illegible]

• • •

I have seen the wittiest and most brilliant women, who did not emanate one spark of that magnetism, known as "It." I have seen the most beautiful physical specimens of both sexes, who left you absolutely cold, after the first gaze. Brains and beauty without "appeal" are just so much protoplasm—excess baggage.

• • •

And, [illegible] bringing [illegible]

• • •

IT HAS NOTHING TO DO WITH THE SHAPE OF HER LEGS

• • •

APPEAL is a secret aliveness and awareness—a subtle something that shines through the eyes and oozes through the finger-tips—an unseen flame. Sometimes we call it "genius"; sometimes we call it "beauty"; sometimes we call it "personality." But it is probably just the emotional carburetor, igniting the spirit of the human machine.

you mean by being attracted to her. I saw a bit of her. Has anything happened?"

"Were you fond of her?"

"There was no love affair?"

"Oh, absolutely and positively not at all, under any circumstances, no! Nothing of the kind, Mr. Colt! No, sir, no, no! Nothing like that!"

"Just friends."

"Nothing more!"

"When did you make this engagement for tonight?"

"Oh, about three weeks ago. I say, you couldn't let me have a spot, could you?"

"A five spot?" asked Flynn, who had taken an instantaneous dislike to this sleek and well-groomed performer.

"What time did you come here tonight?" resumed Colt.

"About 9 o'clock."

"And what time did you leave with Miss Quires?"

"About half past nine."

"And where did you go?"

"To a perfectly dreadful place, the Lion's Paw. Just opened. The whole place is in very bad taste."

"And what time did you get there?"

"About quarter to eleven."

"Out to Rockville Center?" said Flynn. "You were certainly breaking the speed laws."

"Oh, no, positively nothing like that. It only happened that my car is a fast car," explained Guy Everett. "Now won't you gentlemen tell me why you have me here, dragged out on a fiendish night like this? Where is Miss Quires and why may I not talk with her?"

"Ever see that before?"

"Christine's?"

"Yes, she had it with her tonight—say, what in hell is all this?"

"Don't you know?" asked Colt.

"I do not."

"Don't you realize that she has disappeared after the death of Lola Carewe?"

Guy Everett [illegible]

"Look here," he said, "you don't think I had anything to do with this, do you?"

"Didn't you hear what the Commissioner asked you?" roared Dougherty, beating Flynn to it. "Answer the question! What did you do during those three hours?"

"Well," replied the actor thoughtfully, "I don't suppose you gentlemen will understand, but I am an artist, a sensitive person, and I enjoy romantic impressions. When I got into my car tonight I had not the slightest idea of where I was going or what I should do. It was a beastly night, wet, snow falling, a night for witches. I suddenly got the idea that I would like to spend the night alone driving around the country. So I drove back over the Queensborough Bridge and down through Jamaica to the Motor Parkway. The roads are pretty well deserted tonight. I don't think I passed two cars, and after I got as far as Hicksville I turned around and came back."

First, Dougherty exploded.

"Is that the best story you could make up?" he barked. "Why, confound you, Everett, you insult the intelligence of every man in this room. Do you expect us to believe a cock-and-bull story like that?"

"Excuse me, Mr. Dougherty," interrupted Flynn, "but there are some boys downtown who would like to have a session in the back room with Mr. Everett."

"I suppose by that you mean that you are going to attack me physically," he said, with a sudden and gratifying dignity.

Seven Years Labor Behind Venzke's Record

Some French writer [illegible] Voltaire? defined genius as "The capacity for taking infinite pains." No master of any art achieved success without work and plenty of it. The heights can't be reached in a single bound. Back of Gene Venzke's record-wrecking runs were years of plodding. A 4:10 miler is not developed overnight. The making of the future [illegible] started in 1925 and 1926, when he ran daily to and from work, five miles each way [illegible] Pioneer [illegible] Boyertown [illegible] Father Time [illegible] first year. From running to work Gene graduated to road races, then cross country and then out the track. But it was not until [illegible] that he succeeded in running a mile in [illegible] Then [illegible] a half [illegible] he always finished second or third. His times were getting faster with each race, but always it was second or third for Gene, always he saw the flying feet of some rival cross the line ahead. Venzke did not become a consistent winner until late [illegible] year. Seven years of work, work, work are behind Venzke's record wrecking.

WHY THAT'S NO CLIMB AT ALL
AND IF YOU DON'T THINK SO IT ISN'T

Consider Ernie Schaaf [illegible] As Bostonians recall [illegible] Experienced judges of boxing said Schaaf never would make good. They forgot it takes time to make a champion. The Golden Boy stuck stolidly at it, and eventually he found his pugilistic self. It was the same thing with Jack Dempsey, Jack Sharkey, Gene Tunney—work, work, work and sticking [illegible] at it. All of them had lean days, hard days, hungry days. Others of just as great natural fistic ability, perhaps more, [illegible] themselves in the making, quit and fell by the wayside before they could make the grade. Venzke, Schaaf, Sharkey, Dempsey plodded steadily on, ever on—and up. It is the sticker that wins in any line of endeavor. Always back of any great triumph you will find years of work, work, work. No boy ever can expect to become champion who is afraid to put his nose down to the grindstone. As the poetry feller says, "Learn to labor and to wait."

Hardy Payne's ticker, he says, is skipping so many beats that he can't get around like he used to. But he still retains his interest in sport and helps out his friends with most refreshing news and views. Says the guys who think nothing is on the level any more give him a pain in the [illegible] Just to voice his disapproval Hardy takes down the old ukulele, and from up Springfield way warbles:

Of late I've had an inkling that the very stars now twinkling
Are electric lights on some far distant shore
I'll bet the moon is a spotlight in the sky
And the clouds are moving pictures passing by
Of late I've had a notion that they even salt the ocean

Joe Forshaw used to run Marathons for nothing . . . Because of it he couldn't see why Irving Jaffee, Olympic champion skater, should want [illegible] the skating carnival he is staging in [illegible] whether Irving [illegible] We would like to see Gene Venzke [illegible] the IC4A National [illegible] It's the biggest [illegible] in the world . . . Greeks First to Hurl "Pro" Sports Charge

This is an article of the Olympic series by Lawson Robertson, head Olympic coach. Robertson competed in Olympic games and [illegible] He is America's [illegible] appear on [illegible]

[illegible] Olympic [illegible] Greeks. But the Romans, as spectators, took a great interest in the [illegible] tion in the Olympic contests of the future.

Romans Ended Reign of Greeks

Eventually, however, the Romans developed some really great athletes and the domination of the Greeks at the games came to an end. The Olympics were conducted amicably for many generations—and then came discord.

The Greeks charged that the Roman champions were professionalizing themselves. It was claimed that the winners of Olympic events capitalized their popularity and fame by going on tours.

The Romans denied the accusations and continued to participate in Olympic games. But generally [illegible] from the Greeks [illegible] of some [illegible] bitterness through the [illegible]

Romans Wrecked Sports Buildings

[illegible] one of the games the Romans angered to white heat by the Greek charges of professionalism, went on a rampage. They set fire to some of the buildings which were used to house athletes and wrecked about everything that was wreckable in and around the stadium.

So Emperor Theodosius of Rome took the attitude in A. D. 394 that the Olympic games had become a public nuisance and he issued an order abolishing them.

In 1892 Baron Pierre de Coubertin, of France, an athletic enthusiast, proposed a revival of the ancient games in Athens. Jeers met his ears. But he persisted with his suggestion and in 1894 lined up sufficient support to insure the staging of the games.

SHORE PICKED FOR 'ALL' BERTH

Toronto, Ont., March 2 (AP)—The New York Rangers and Montreal Canadiens, current leaders of the National Hockey League's two divisions, have the greatest collection of star players, according to a vote of 32 hockey experts from the eight N. H. L. cities in the United States and Canada.

In the voting for the second annual all-star teams chosen by the hockey writers for the Canadian press [illegible] Rangers and [illegible] Canadiens had their names entered among [illegible] Toronto, Boston, and Montreal Maroons were each represented by seven players, Chicago, Detroit by five and the New York Americans by three.

Charlie Gardner of Chicago at goal, Howie Morenz, speedy center of the Montreal Canadiens and Eddie Shore, Boston Bruin, defense ace, were the other members of last year's all-star team who held their places.

DIT CLAPPER NETS THREE FOR BOSTON

By BILL GRIMES

After allowing 4 to 1 and 6 to 4 leads to slip out the window, the Bruins held just enough in reserve to nick Les Canadiens 7 to 6, at the Boston Garden.

The game was one of the fastest and most thrilling seen here in many moons. From the first face-off to the final whistle both teams traveled at top speed and the capacity crowd was in an uproar during the entire tilt.

Dit Clapper and Marty Barry featured for the Bruins, while Howie Morenz and Aurel Joliat stood out most prominently among the Flying Frenchmen.

Three of the seven Bruin goals were scored by Dit Clapper, and he was credited with an assist on Cooney Weiland's first marker.

Although Marty Barry failed to score he came out of the contest with four assists, while Eddie Shore scored a goal and was in two other scoring plays. Weiland caged two tallies and Harry Oliver one.

Howie Morenz Gives Great Exhibition

Howie Morenz, who is at the very peak of his game, gave one of his greatest exhibitions. He stepped at his best from the start and the goal he scored after taking a pass from Aurel Joliat in the third period was one of the greatest ever seen at the Garden.

The Bruins walked through Canadiens for four goals in the first period and went to the first intermission with a 4 to 1 lead, Dunc Munro having soloed for the Frenchmen's first goal. After Albert Leduc had accounted for the second Canadien goal, Dit Clapper picked up a pass from Marty Barry and the Bruins were three goals out in front again.

But at this point the two Canadien stars, Morenz and Joliat, swung into action and within a few minutes the Frenchmen had pulled in to within one goal of the Rossmen.

Clapper came up with his third tally just before the end of the second period, putting the Bruins two tallies out in front again, only to have the game tied up early in the final canto. Morenz contributed a sensational marker and a pretty piece of combination play by Wildor LaRochelle and George Mantha was good for a score.

The deciding goal was scored by Cooney Weiland who snared a dead puck after a Shore shot. Barry and Shore teamed up and Eddie's shot was saved by George Hainsworth, who was unable to clear before Wo and had reached over and punched the rubber into the nets for the winning goal.

Maroons Edge Hawks; Maple Leafs Win

While the Bruins were engaged in their hectic tussle with Les Canadiens, the Montreal Maroons were defeating the Chicago Black-hawks 1 to 0 in the Forum and the Toronto Maple Leafs were setting back the New York Americans 3 to 1 in Toronto.

The Bruins and the Blackhawks have eight games to play and the Rossmen have now pulled up to within one point of the Windy City outfit. The Maroons are now five points out in front of the Americans and practically assured of reaching the playoffs while Canadiens and Maple Leafs are now deadlocked in first place of the American division.

The Canadiens go right back into action tomorrow night against Maroons but the Bruins will be idle until Saturday, when they tackle Sprague Cleghorn's clan in Montreal, on which night the Flying Frenchmen will engage the Maple Leafs in a battle for first place of the International division.

RAP TERRIERS' ATHLETIC BOARD

The release of Alton K. "Special Delivery" Marsters, of Dartmouth athletic fame, as backfield coach at Boston University today was the object of a bitter attack by the News, official undergraduate daily.

The paper characterized the move as one of the worst the university has ever taken.

It charged that Dean Frederick Rand Rogers of the department of student health and physical education became prejudiced against the entire 1931 coaching staff of Hilary Mahaney, Marsters and George Kenneally because Mahaney had indicated opposition to Rogers' so-called player control system.

SPEED TO BE KEYNOTE OF BRAVES' ATTACK

TRIBESMEN CAN STEP WITH BEST

By JOE CASHMAN

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 2 —Speed will be the keynote of the Boston attack this season

Profiting from the unpleasant experience of losing countless games last year because certain of his athletes couldn't move off a dime, Manager Bill McKechnie has weeded out a few of the snails and secured in their stead a [illegible] of young sters who can [illegible] the mail with the best of 'em.

That's why McKechnie turned Sherry, Ben Cronin and other slow moving players loose and insisted on fast men when he went seeking replacements.

"Every club must be fast to succeed these days, and especially a club like mine, which boasts few terrific hitters and must rely to a large extent on the hit and run, stealing bases and stretching hits to make runs," explains Boss Bill.

"It was a common occurrence last year to see some of our men barely reach second on legitimate triplets, being held at first on honest-to-goodness doubles, and being thrown out at the plate by a wide margin trying to score from second on a single. It's hard to win ball games under those conditions.

McKechnie Hopes to Win Out With Speed

"I'm sure it will be different this season. We will be one of the fastest teams in the circuit if a few of the newcomers I am banking on manage to make the grade. And our speed will furnish us more hits, runs and victories than many more powerful but slower rivals."

Everybody [illegible] Bill Sherdel [illegible] veteran southpaw [illegible] today's practice [illegible] was to consist of a batting and fielding drill for two hours in the morning and two more hours in the afternoon [illegible] arrives as predicted.

DODGERS FIGHT TO REDUCE

Clearwater, Fla., March 2 (AP) —Manager Max Carey is no admirer of fat men, not when they're also supposed to be ball players.

He called for a general weighing in yesterday and discovered a few [illegible] facts. Red Howell, 234 pounds; Ike Boone, 226; Dazzy Vance, 220; Babe Phelps, 218; Pea Ridge Day, 206.

A bit dazed by these imposing figures Max sent the boys out on the field and had them pulling and tugging at a two-ton steam roller. "If that won't do the job," he said, "I'll have to put you fellows under it one by one and let the other boys roll it."

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 2 (AP) —Lyn Lary, the regular [illegible] may not be at shortstop for the New York Yankees, but he certainly will be in the infield somewhere.

MR. BOSTON

By JACK CONWAY

CHARLEY STRACK didn't look the least bit like the toughest human in the world when he dropped into this office to pose for a few fiery wrestling pictures. Yet I stand ready to give odds of 10 to 3 that the Oklahoma man can take any other husky into a locked room and come through with a victory.

Mr Boston

Of course in that kind of a scrap Strack wouldn't be handicapped by technical rules. Fellows like Strack prefer a free-for-all scrap or one where they must follow some rules or wrestling. [illegible] stated [illegible] in Oklahoma when in his teens. Twice he was considered good enough to be picked to represent the United States in the Olympics.

Indrisano Ready to Crash Into Money

LOOKS AS IF [illegible] Indrisano is on fire with a desire once more to become a national figure in the welterweight division. Indrisano always did possess plenty of class but the breaks of the game have been against him. He licked Joe Dundee in an overweight match at the time the latter held the title. He then bumped off Tommy Freeman who later became champion.

[illegible] when it looked as if Indrisano was going to get a championship [illegible] with Dundee in New York he suffered a broken jaw in a match with [illegible]. Did Indrisano give up hope? No! He's as ambitious today as when he first busted into the fight game.

Opportunity is once more knocking at Indrisano's door. If the East Boston warrior can get by [illegible] world's welterweight champion at the Boston Garden on [illegible] he can step to bat and write his own ticket. Fields [illegible] to avoid Indrisano [illegible].

"I'll fight 'em all," said Fields. "I wouldn't want to say I was champion if I didn't have the courage to meet all-comers."

FIELDS CAME here from Pittsburgh where he knocked out Jimmy Belmont in eight rounds on Monday night.

The commissioner not only refused to restore Mayes to good standing but warned Battalino that he must transact his own business in the future.

BIG GAINS IN VALUES OF STOCKS, BONDS

By B. C. FORBES

The market value of New York Stock Exchange stocks increased upwards of a [illegible] dollars during February. Bonds fared even better.

Confidence grows that quotations will not again sink to new depths.

Short Sellers Worried

One reader, after quoting from a newspaper, "Without short selling, Mr. Whitney (N. Y. Stock Exchange president), added, prices [illegible] to extreme heights until checked, only to fall into crevasses so deep as to be ruinous to investors," comments:

"With short selling permitted, prices went to extreme heights in 1929; similarly with short selling permitted they have gone to extreme depths. Just how far should they go to reach a crevasse in accordance with Mr. Whitney's definition and be ruinous to investors?"

What is bothering a few financial nabobs is Washington's threat to summons the biggest short-sellers, thus unmasking their identity. The plea is being made that Washington should scrupulously avoid doing anything not calculated to inspire tranquility.

Tariff No Cure for Oil Problem

Should the United States impose a tariff on importations of oil? [illegible] of Henry L. Doherty & Company [illegible] with characteristic frankness:

"We are willing to do anything under the sun to help to stabilize the oil business. A tariff might help a little but at best it would treat symptoms and would not get at the root of our present troubles.

"Total imports of petroleum products during the last calendar year were only 86,000,000 barrels. And we exported 124,000,000 barrels. If a high tariff is built, we shall have to meet in our present foreign markets the petroleum products now imported into this country, much of which we process within our border and on which processing we make some profit.

"While the actual petroleum production reported in the United States during the last calendar year was appriximately 850,000,000 barrels, this figure represents perhaps less than one-half of the actual potential production available; or, stated in another way, we could now produce in this country alone more than twice as much oil as we are currently using.

"Until this condition is in better balance, we cannot hope for permanent relief; and, while the exclusion of foreign oil would help some, it would be a drop in the bucket."

Poor Month for Dividends

February was a [illegible] month [illegible] only 31 favorable announcements, contrasted with 204 unfavorable. The latter included 91 reductions and 61 omissions, while 52 payments were deferred.

Financial News, Stocks, Bonds and Comment

—STATE ST.— Hears:

That prices continue to wend their weary way along the sidewise path of the last 14 days. This has encouraged many small traders to venture on the short side. Conservatives are warning against this as the chance of professional attempts at a run in are great, even though the market as a whole is destined to a protracted period of quiet.

The Rails

Bearishness seems to be built around the poor prospects of the rails. Admittedly the carriers are experiencing mighty lean times. But [illegible] that they will lie down and give up. While there are better investment opportunities at present there is no reason to assume that the railways have not seen the worst. Good rail men feel their troubles are largely over and from now on [illegible] improving condition will [illegible]. Two possible railroad economies are busses on present short lines and lighter equipment on longer hauls.

Reduction of total train loads is a distinct possibility according to those who have been following recent experiments in aluminum car building. Savings in haulage could add a considerable amount to present incomes. Substitution of buses on present short lines is even more interesting. It means not only [illegible] reduction of present [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] same competition, as well as the probable entry of railroads into another business. Transportation may be forced into partnership with truck manufacturers.

Rails and Trucks

Going a little further into the [illegible] between rails and trucks [illegible] well to remember that many [illegible] think the next decade will witness a tremendous growth of door to door service by the carriers. Thus the trend toward motorized short lines and door deliveries would make it good business on the part of the carriers to control, or have an important part in the direction of leading truck makers. This could be done through the very useful holding companies.

If the picture is further elaborated it is easy to imagine the Van Sweringen interests taking some part in the affairs of White Motors. The concern is located in Cleveland where the Van Sweringens have concentrated the direction of their rail interests. Manufacturing on order, it would be good business on the part of the company to align itself with those controlling a large potential demand. At current levels the cost to the rail magnates is very reasonable and should prove a profitable investment.

NEW ENGLAND'S LEADERSHIP IS SHOWN

By FRANK H. MELOON

While the big stores are booming New England products, New England's leadership in executive manpower can also be shown by citing a few outstanding examples. Take the so-called "billion-dollar" corporations. Walter S. Gifford, who comes from Salem, is president of American Telephone; James A. Farrell of New Haven is president of U S Steel; Alfred P Sloan, Jr., also a New Haven man, is president of General Motors.

• • •

The heads of several of the great New York banks are New England men. The names of Mitchell and W[illegible], for example, were [illegible] in the Boston banking world before they began to be blazoned in New York. The two largest food chains were of New England origin, and the same is true of other merchandising [illegible]. We have not furnished all the leaders, of course, but only somewhat more than would appear to be our expected share of them.

• • •

Vice-President and General Manager John F. Tinsley of the Crompton & Knowles loom works of Worcester, who is chairman of the New England Council's Community Development Committee, [illegible] to make an important report at a Hartford meeting Friday. Mr. Tinsley, who has in the past contributed to the financial section of the Boston Evening American [illegible] of the [illegible] made in the campaign to stimulate New England communities to study and act intelligently on their problems of public expenditure and taxation.

John F. Tinsley

• • •

Mr. Tinsley deserves credit for having been, last September, among the first to suggest such a drive as is now being made by the American Legion to secure jobs for the able bodied unemployed.

• • •

While Graton & Knight, of which Frank H. Willard, president of Associated Industries, is head, again reports a deficit for the year, it is most interesting to hear from Mr. Willard that:

"We were able to show a small operating profit before depreciation. A further shrinkage in hides from 9 cents a pound in December, 1930, to 6½ cent average in December, 1931, made it necessary to depreciate our inventory to the extent of $458,000."

Dictaphone Reports $222,758 Net Income

New York, March 2—Dictaphone Corp. reports for 1931 net income of $222,758 after depreciation, federal taxes, etc., equal after 8 per cent preferred dividends, to $1.07 a share on 126,622 no-par shares of common stock. This compares with $404,161, or $2.48 a common share, in 1930.

Fresh Stimulus Is Given by Coppers

Copper stocks gave the market a fresh stimulus today when Anaconda led the metal group up accompanied by Cerro De Pasco. Hope that fresh curtailment would be agreed upon by producers tomorrow and save the industry from a price war caused the advance.

Good Reports Come From Auto Industry

Good reports continue to be heard from the automotive industry. Today it was announced Graham-Paige Motors Corp. in January shipped 2537 units. Retail sales from Jan. 1 through Feb. 20 showed a gain of 12 per cent over the same period in 1931.

Westinghouse-Radio Pact Is Dissolved

Through an announcement of the International Telephone & Telegraph Co. that its subsidiary, Kolster Radio, was arranging with the Westinghouse Electric Supply Co. to act as its selling agent, it was revealed today that the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co. and Radio Corporation of America have terminated their radio manufacturing agreement of 1930.

It is understood Radio Corporation will continue making sets for the General Electric Co., which was also a party to the agreement.

Johns-Manville Report Bearish

Annual report of Johns Manville, together with the cut in the dividend, and reports now current present a distinctly bearish outlook. While for the first nine months the company showed $1.08 a share, yet the net for the year was only eight cents a share. Of greater importance than the statement, according to some observers, is the fact that business is currently as bad as the last quarter. The management is reported to have taken every possible step to cope with present poor conditions, and is understood to be prepared fro a very unfavorable first half.

Union Carbide Acting Better

Union Carbide has been acting much better since the directors reduced the dividend rate to a $2 a share annual basis. Prior to the dividend meeting there had been periods of selling in the stock on rumors that the board would reduce the rate because earnings did not justify continuation of the old dividend. Short covering has been one of the factors in the shares but it is stated in some commission houses that the stock also has been meeting scale buying on minor recessions, the demand coming from long-term investors who believe that the company can maintain the lower rate and that it is in a position to benefit immediately with any change for the better in general business.

Borden Company's Sales Outlook

Judging from discussions around the street the views on Borden continue decidedly mixed. Many have been making pessimistic predictions regarding the outlook, but these are not shared in quarters usually well-informed on the company's affairs. While it is true that curtailed buying power on the part of the public had an adverse effect on sales the past few months, it is equally true that lower prices for products have been offset to a considerable extent by substantial savings in raw milk and delivery costs. Milk is one of the products which would reflect a change for the better in general business conditions almost immediately, and Borden, with other dairy companies would benefit.

General Electric's Dividend Outlook

With estimates placing General Electric's net for the past year at $1.35 a share, reports are current that the dividend may be lowered to 25 or 30 cents a share from the present 40 cents a share at the next meeting.

—SPECTATOR— Says:

Rumors of a rally in the market to start at once are heard. There is the usual crop of stories on "good news" developments, both in Washington and in Europe, to explain the reported move. Wall Street is getting restive at these dull markets and will probably try to do something anyway just to break the monotony.

Here and There

The "good news" from Europe rumors may be attributed partly to the sustained strength in London and Paris markets and partly to the improved English financial situation . . . It's natural, anyway, to expect our market to perk up a bit if those abroad continue to work higher. The sympathetic action . . A cue to this sympathetic action may be the fact that London and Paris have been buying stocks here for the last few days. The leaders largely, though strength in Royal Dutch suggests Holland . . . reports reaching Wall St. from Europe continue to expect Von Hindenberg's re-election and this is considered the first step to an accord with France.

. . . The alcohol stocks, though remotely involved at best, are doing some "celebrating" over the victory of the anti-dry group in forcing a vote on prohibition in the House . . . Resentment in brokerage circles at the higher state stock taxes would be mollified if there were any activity. It's the scalpers who are hurt most. The word has gone out to watch Air Reduction based, it is understood, on the existence of a stale short interest in the issue.

Dividends

Lone Star Gas Co. declared a quarterly dividend of 15 cents on the common, payable March 31 to stock of record March 15. This places the stock on a 60-cent annual basis, against 88 cents previously.

MODERATE RISE IS REGISTERED IN WALL ST.

New York, March 2—A moderate rise was registered in Wall St. trading today by important shares. Trading remained in scanty volume as the market proceeded to assume its somewhat more cheerful aspect.

A few "air pockets" were uncovered, but in the second period gains of a point or more were fairly numerous and scattered over the list.

STEEL HIGHER

U. S. Steel started fractionally higher and extended the gain to around a point in late dealings. Issues up a point or more included Coca-Cola, Houston Oil, International Shoe, Columbia Carbon and Eastman Kodak.

American Telephone advanced over 2 points and Allied Chemical was up 2. International Business Machine was around 3 points higher. Homestake Mining registered an advance of a 4 points.

Gains of a point or better was shown for Electric Auto Lite, Drug, Woolworth, Westinghouse, Union Pacific, Consolidated Gas, McKeesport and Lambert. American Can was nearly 2 points above its previous closing price.

Announcement that England this week would pay off $150,000,000 of th e$200,000,000 credit it arranged here last summer in its futile effort to stabilize the pound had a favorable effect, as the loan was not due for six months.

CARLOADINGS SURPRISE

Carloadings rose over 10,000 for the week, a surprise to the trading community, as rumors yesterday were that a decline would be shown. Further optimism of a near upturn in the steel industry was voiced by Iron Age in its weekly review.

Spring trade barmoters showed scattered indications of an upturn in business. The heavier industries, however, appeared still hesitant with steel ignot production continuing at 26 per cent of capacity.

The carloading figures seemed significant. In the first three weeks of February, loadings advanced 11,449 cars which contrasts with actual declines in the corresponding periods of preceding years, amounting to 6,241 cars last year, 184,997 in 1930 and 119,594 in the first three weeks of February, 1929.

Still another evidence of gradually improving European financial conditions was also furnished in announcement that hte Bank of Norway had again cut its discount rate, this time to 5 per cent.

Latest gold movement figures, while showing another large shipment to France, indicated strongly that the tide had now changed.

Foreign exchange markets today lent further support to this belief, the dollar gaining in London and Paris transactions. Sterling cables were quoted at an opening price of $3.48⅝, off ⅛ cent, and French francs were of ⅛ point to 3.93¾ cents.

February Defaults Fall Below January

Although the number of commercial failures in the United States for February declined 21.0 per cent from the January total, it established a new level for the month. The number of insolvencies reached a total of 2732, due perhaps to the prolonged economic unsettlement prevailing at this period, which generally affects all commercial enterprises.

This figure is 6.6 per cent in excess of last year's total of 2563 and 17.2 per cent above the previous maximum which was achieved in 1922, when a total of 2331 failures was reported. On but six occasions prior to the current year have there been as many as 2000 insolvencies in February—namely in 1931, 1930, 1928, 1927, 1922 and 1915.

Graton & Knight Co. Report Is Issued

Graton & Knight Co. of Worcester, makers of belting and other leather products, issues its report for 1931 showing a deficit after all charges [illegible] reserves of $771,592. Depreciati[illegible] inventory accounted for $45[illegible] The 1931 loss compares wi[illegible] ficit in 1930 of $983,665. In 1[illegible] the company reported a deficit [illegible] charges and 7 per cent dividends on $2,062,930 preferred stock of $3.57 per share on the 83,046 common shares and an operating profit of 98 cents a share was reported on the common in the previous year. In 1928 the company showed a loss of $171,689 after appropriations to special reserves.

Large Order for Steel Scrap Placed

Pittsburgh, March 2—The leading interest in the steel trade here has arranged for purchase of aproximately 10,000 tons of No. 1 heavy melting steel scrap, paying the same prices that prevailed in its January purchases, or $10.25 and $16.50 a ton, depending on the shipping points. This interest was absent from the scrap market last month.

Composite Price of Steels Unchanged

New York, March 2 (AP)—Because higher prices o nsome steel products have not yet been fully established, Iron Age has not changed its finished composite price, which remains unchanged at 2.037 cents a pound. Pig iron and scrap steel are also unchanged at $14.48 a gross ton for the former and $8.23 a gross ton for the latter.

CURB MARKET IS IRREGULAR

New York, March 2 (AP)—The Curb market hardened slowly today but actively failed to quicken.

Insull issues, which had been sagging this week, acquired a steadier tone. United Light was slightly off in response to deferment of dividend action, but fractional gains appeared in American Gas, Brazilian Traction Consolidated Gas of Baltimore and Hydro-Electric Securities. Utilities Power & Light was a trifle heavy.

Woolworth, Ltd., and Aluminum of America moved higher, the former making a good fractional gain. On the whole, specialties and industrials were sluggish. Little interest was taken in the metal stocks.

The statistical position of the oil industry still leaves room for vast improvement. Crude production rose 30,000 barrels last week while there was another increase in gasoline stocks at refineries.

Mild weather in most sections of the country is expected to tdvance the date of seasonal expansion in use of motor fuel, although it has been suggested that automobile travel may be curtailed this year. Oil shares have recently been dull, acking sponsorship even on the rallies. Changes today were narrow.

DEFICIT NEARLY TWO BILLION

Washington, March 2 (INS)—The government ended the eighth month of the 1932 fiscal year Feb. 29 with a deficit of $1,751,000,000 the Treasury announced today.

Extraordinary expenditures, including the payment of $67,095,000 in loans for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and subscription to $63,243,000 in stock of the Federal land banks, boosted the deficit rapidly during February.

The year will end with a deficit exceeding $2,500,000,000, according to present indications.

At the end of February, the public debt was $18,125,633,000, an increase of $311,000,000 in February, of $1,324,000,000 since July 1 and $1,895,000,000 in a year.

Belgian National Votes 1931 Dividend

Annual report of the bank points out that the gold cover at the end of the year was 66 per cent of sight liabilities despite an increase in circulation to 18,000,000,000 Belgian francs from 15,750,000,000. Over three-quarters of the increase in circulation since June has been represented by 1000 and 10,000 franc notes, which, it was stated, are being hoarded.

Crude Oil Output Up 30,000 Barrels

The American Petroleum Institute reported that the estimated daily average gross crude oil production in the United States for the week ended Feb. 27 was 2,138,050 barrels, as compared with 2,108,050 barrels for the preceding week, an increase of 30,000 barrels. The daily average production east of California was 1,628,850 barrels, as compared with 1,600,750 barrels, an increase of 28,100 barrels.

Utility Has Big Gain in Stockholders

Ottawa, March 2—Canadian Hydro-Electric Corporation, Limited, reports that the 17th regular quarterly dividend of $1.50 a share on its 6 per cent cumulative first preferred stock was paid to 6755 shareholders, a new high record and twice the number to whom the corporation paid its first dividend on March 1, 1928.

The number of these shareholders of the corporation has not only shown growth at the close of each year since then, but has reached a new high level at each of the dividend payments in the past year.

The number of shares of the corporation's 6 per cent cumulative first preferred stock now held is 18½ shares per shareholder, compared with 37 shares when the first dividend was paid in 1928.

Canadian Hydro-Electric Corporation, Limited, was organized late in 1927 to acquire control of Gatineau Power Company, Gatineau Electric Light Company, Limited, and Saint John River Power Company, and is now one of the largest owners of waterpowers in North America.

Sees Steel Price Decline Checked

Youngstown, March 2—Definite indications of steel trend for 1932 are lacking, Chairman Girdler, of Republic Steel Corp. told stockholders. "Further decline in prices is improbable," he said, "and increases are not unlikely. Stocks of material of manufacturers and consumers are inadequate for conduct of business at an average rate. Use or consumption of steel products has been in excess of production for a considerable period and necessity for additional production is approaching."

'Phone Help Good Salesmen

New York, March 2 (AP)—Employes of American Telephone Co., regardless of rank, turned aggressive salesmen last year, and as a result of their efforts the company received additional revenue of more than $12,000,000 in 1931 it was reported today. The workers made an average of six sales of telephone or stations during the year, which outdoes any previous showing.

Many mills outside the association will follow the amalgamated scale.

"DOLLAR RUG" FOUND LEGAL

New York, March 2—American Banker reports an endeavor to find, in this principal port of entry, some justification for seizure of a Grecian six-foot rug in the design of the $5 national bank note not only failed, but unearthed a ruling of the law office of the Federal government, seemingly entirely upsetting any such action on the part of the secret service division.

A party representing himself to be acting for the First National Bank of Laurel, Miss., had in his baggage when he entered the Port of New York last fall, a Grecian rug, five by three feet, in the design of a $1 silver certificate of the United States. A customs agent, probably wanting to be on the right side, confiscated this rug.

Then ensued some correspondence with the Treasury Department at Washington, seeking release of the rug as an article intended not for commercial use, out as the personal property of the owner. The matter was referred to the Federal district attorney's office in New York for determination.

The district attorney's office ruled that the rug did not violate any Federal law, and that it could be brought in.

BRITAIN TO PAY U.S.150 MILLION

London, March 2 (INS)—Reflecting the improved condition of the British treasury, Chancellor of the Exchequer Neville Chamberlain announced in the House of Commons today that the credit due to France will shortly be reduced from 20,000,000 to approximately 7,000,000 pounds.

He also confirmed that arrangements had been completed for payment on Friday of $150,000,000 of the $200,000,000 credit granted by the United States.

The chancellor announced that from tonight the restrictions prohibiting British citizens from purchasing foreign exchange will be removed.

Frisby Organizing International Police Force!

A postcard from far-off Shanghai-on-Avon signed by our correspondent, Horace Walpole Frisby, brings good news. The Congressman-at-Large is organizing an international police force. Above picture shows the first crack battalion, which has already landed and established headquarters in a pool hall on the Whangpoo River. "We hope," says Frisby, "to gradually enlarge our force until we have a male quartette, dramatic society and a comfortable chair and reading lamp for each and every man. We have adopted the Culbertson forced bid system and hold luncheons every Wednesday. Visiting members of other international police forces are welcome. Committees have been appointed and plans made for the International Policemen's Ball, tickets for which are available at any tea shoppe or from the Secretariat of the League of Nations."

THE VOICE OF BROADWAY

—By LOUIS SOBOL—

Broadway's Lower Half!

(As seen by Lew Levinson, a philanthropic scribbler, who comes to the aid of the ailing Mister Sobol by donating this gratuitous column.)

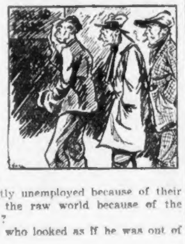
Ol' Brer Sobol sits around on cafe floors and writes about the Upper Half of the Underworld of Broadway. Outside the bolted and barred windows of speaks and nightclubs the Lower Half waits patiently for bread.

I never talked to them before. They were there, they have been there, standing in line for their sandwiches and coffee, waiting . . .



Mistah Sobol, as he grandiloquently styles himself in that quaint Southern (Connecticut) dialet of his, has acquired a colony of flu germs which he is endeavoring to expel from his gnarled and twisted system. Thus it happens that on a sunshiny day in late February, I wander down into Times Square, onto that little triangle where from two to three thousand men wait and wait . . . for bread.

Who are they? What are they? Are they derelicts? Justly unemployed because of their inefficiency? Or cast out into the raw world because of the failure of the capitalistic system?

I asked the first man I saw who looked as if he was out of work . . .

"Who are you?"

His name is Zephyr Goyette. He comes from Mon'real. He's a French-Canadian. He's been in Les States Unis since Juin, 1907, and if the texture of his skin is to offer proof of his ability to enjoy a good glass of red or white wine, I'd say he's a drinking man.

In the argot of the bas-lieux of Montreal, Zephyr is a travailleur. That is to say, he works as a laborer. "East and west I travelle," he says, with a trace of Maurice Chevalier in his accent. "I carrie my peeck wit' me," he adds.

He worked two days in the last month. He made four dollars in those two days. He has no "familie." Only a gracious smile, dark eyes and no money.

"Not a cent?"

From a North Carolina that is surely no sunnier than New York came Andy Watts a few weeks ago. He's a Cracker all right, and down in the Cracker belt, where moonshine shines and Holy Rollers roll, Andy had a job as a garage mechanic. He's about 23 and "ain't got no family a'tall. Jes was sorta laid off and sorta thought Ah'd like to come No'th to look fo' a job."

Andy's been lucky. He got himself a job of a week'n a half an' earn fo' himself as much as fifteen dollahs an' seventy-five cents. That's a week and a half ago, and Andy is shivering a little bit in his thin Southern overcoat.

"Where do you live, Andy?"

Life's tough on Andy.

Life's easy to Joe Rossi. Joe hasn't worked since last October. Then he was an elevator boy and bell hop in the Hotel Ogden. He still has a better haircut than I have and his overcoat isn't bad and he lives in a room on 58th st. and he doesn't seem worried. His father . . . sends a few dollars a week to him. That lets him eat.

Joe has friends. I thought Ciro Terranova was one of them when a huge Italian asked me why I was asking Joe about his background, his family and his source of income. And when the huge Italian decided to tear up my notes, I let him do so, especially as I care just a trifle more for my skin than for Mistah Sobol's column. I'll pass Joe Rossi, therefore, and turn to John Sullivan, who was born these 54 years or more ago in Tipperary in that Ireland of leprechauns and faery lore and blue-eyed ladies and high-stepping horses.

It must have been in a blue-eyed lady's stable that Johnny Sullivan got his first job as a stablehand. And when the faeries left Ireland, Johnny came to America, too. He worked and he worked, caressing the flanks of the horses with his horny old hand and whispering tales of old Ireland to them. Then the depression . . .

It's been three years since Johnny was laid off by the American Express Company. He works now and a bit at what he chooses to call ends and odds, and I'm sure that all of his talk is as quaint and if I had the time to be listenin' to it, sure an' I'd sit for the hour at his feet and hear tell of the old country. But there I go into Irish myself and that would never do, with the face of me that I wear, so let me say that today, Johnny has not a cent in his jeans and he hasn't worked in six weeks and he hasn't a soul in the world of his own, and when he gets it . . . he goes to a lodging. You'll find him tonight again in the breadline in Times Square and you'll know him because he has those Irish eyes and he still smells a bit of the horses that used to be in an Ireland that, like the rest of the romantic old world, is no more.

A bit down the street from Johnny Sullivan, George was panhandling. He was in the process of extracting 10 cents from a group of actors standing in front of the Palace Theater and anyone who can do that is entitled to a grand salaam.

George has no other name. He's a internationalist, sez he. I asked him if he was a Communist and I'm sure that his "yes" would have come as easily if I had asked him if he was a Republican. There is only four and a half feet of him and it's all agile, mentally and physically.

"I'm high class," he said. "I work in restaurants, at, y'know, washin' dishes and anything that comes along. I worked uptown last time. Got 18 to 25."

"When I got it, in a private place, y'know...a lodging or a hotel. When I ain't...well, what can a man do?"

That's what I want to know? What can a man do and still keep cheerful? George was cheerful. George is going to meet me today at two in front of the Bond Building and I'm going to try to find a job for him. He's a feather blown off the plume that Life wears when times are good, for in good times I can imagine George singing happily as the greasy dishes slip into the soapy water and just loving life so much he doesn't care much what happens.

There was sadness in the eyes of Joe Lynch, who confessed he was born in Cork City, as he called it to differentiate it from county Cork. He'll work at anything, for the overcoat he wears is threadbare. In fact Joe is puzzled by life...that's certain. He doesn't recall when he worked last; only that it was in a hotel down on Fifth ave. somewhere and it was at house cleaning.

Joe had a good job once in the Paramount Hotel. He seems a little aggressive and must have been overly so the day a dispute arose between the bellhops and the hotel. The result was that Joe was laid off. But that was months ago and Joe needs work badly.

Joe's puzzled. So is Tom and Johnny and Zephyr and irrepressible George. It's hard to believe that there they were on the street of streets, where Texas Guinan used to reign, where even these winter evenings many a club flows over with eager patrons, who stare at what in literary circles are known as nude coryphees...

Ol' Massa Sobol, when you are once again on your mismatched feet stop a moment as you pass the breadline on the way to your Recording of Revels...say a word for the Underdog in your Scintillating Snapshots of Manhattan.

JOHNSON HEADS JOBLESS DRIVE

Edwin C. Johnson, president of the H. A. Johnson Co., has accepted the chairmanship of the job-finding committee of the Boston Emergency Committee on Unemployment. The goal of the committee will be to find occupation for every unemployed person, either whole time or part, in the city of Boston, according to William H. Taylor, chairman of the Boston Emergency Committee.

The plans of the committee are to organize an army of several thousand volunteer men and women who will canvass every shop, store and trade in the city, as well as private homes, in an effort to induce owners and occupants to create work.

Co-operation of civic, fraternal, service and women's organizations of the city has been requested by the committee in carrying out its ends. The Boston units of the American Legion have pledged active co-operation.

Fascist Revolt in Finland Near End

Helsingfors, Finland, March 2 (AP)—The force of Fascist revolters who continued to hold the town of Mantsala today dwindled during the night from 20,000 to not more than 4000, and government officials expressed belief the revolt would be ended without bloodshed.

A large force of government troops was camped outside the city, which is 35 miles from the capital. The government officers have refused to negotiate with the rebels.

Buried 36 Hours in Snow; Still Lives

New Westminster, B. C., March 1 (AP)—Rescued from a snowdrift in which he was buried for 26 hours, John Peebles, 19, Kettle Valley Railway sectionman, was recovering in hospital here today. He is suffering from frozen hands and feet and from exposure. A snowslide buried him under about 18 feet of snow. Air pockets helped to keep him alive.

Side-Stepping Dry Issue
Illogical and Cowardly

The attempts of some of the political leaders of Massachusetts to avoid prohibition as a political issue are both illogical and cowardly.

They are cowardly because they seek to evade the consequences which a full and frank discussion of prohibition might have upon the personal fortunes of the candidates for public office.

They are illogical because prohibition IS a political issue and there is no sensible or brave way of dismissing it as a political issue.

How was prohibition put into existence?

It was put into existence by a constitutional amendment adopted by the Congress of the United States and ratified by the Legislatures of the States.

The Constitution of the United States is the political framework of the United States. The Congress and the Legislatures are political institutions. The Congressmen and legislators who gave us prohibition are creatures of the political system.

Prohibition was created by direct political action. It has been sustained by political action. And it can be altered and revised and a system of sanity and temperance restored in consonance with the sentiment of the vast majority of the American people only by political action.

Some of the same calibre of evasive politicians sought to avoid slavery, the last of the great moral-political issues affecting the wellbeing of the American people. They were castigated by public sentiment for their cowardly hypocrisy and one of the great political parties for whom they spoke was blasted out of existence by public condemnation. The same can happen again.

The Legion's Big Drive
It Deserves Success

The first ten days of the American Legion's "Give a Job" drive show results that ought to gratify its sponsors.

Nearly 100,000 men have been put to work, and impetus has been added to the campaign by the promise of many of the great fraternal orders to co-operate.

The American Federation of Labor and the National Association of Advertisers have assisted the Legion from the first.

Nearly 7000 other organizations in all parts of the country have since joined, and a total of five million men and women are now engaged in soliciting employment for the jobless in their territories.

Whether the goal of a million jobs in thirty days is reached or not, the Legion and its associated workers deserve the highest credit for their efforts.

They, at least, have ACTED.

That is more than you can say for the Federal Government. Its unemployment relief has been one per cent action and 99 per cent TALK.

The Drab Sex

Bulletins from the fashion show for men at the Hotel Commodore in New York announce that bright plaid suits are to be de rigeur this Spring. The ultimate chic will be the plaid of the Glenurquehart clan. The Campbells, McDonalds and McTrosachs will gnash their teeth and defy the ukase to the point of violence.

Further, the custom cutters say dark blue and dark brown are out, and that men's stubbornness in wearing such tints are giving way before the example of women's garb, now as luminous and alluring as butterflies.

In their war against the drab, the cutters refuse to sheathe their scissors. They have fought against blue and brown since the early Cleveland epoch. They haven't made much progress. Docile and conservative, the males will probably creep around in sombre tones for three more decades to come.

Air Travel Booms

One bright spot in a gloomy year was the tremendously increased number of passengers carried by air lines in 1931.

The Department of Commerce reveals that the large companies carried 457,753 last year as compared with 385,910 in 1930, a gain of wellnigh 20 per cent.

Similar increases were made in mileage and in the amount of mail transported. Indications are that even greater advances will be made this year.

Flying has become a stabilized industry—a safe, speedy and certain method of annihilating distance. Years of study, experiment and accident are bearing fruit at last. "Air-mindedness" is no longer a mere advertising slogan, but a fact. By 1937 an air trip will be as commonplace as a subway ride, and no more expensive per mile.

Our Eleven Years' War

While war ranges in China, Americans are prone to forget that they are engaged in a full-fledged war of their own—with a navy, an air force, guns, poison gas, radio and all the paraphernalia of up-to-date combat.

It's the rum-running war. Admiral Billard, commanding the U. S. fleet, says the enemy squadron consists of 171 ships, and that he needs reinforcements to clean them up. He adds that the foe has facilities for chemical warfare, that they are well organized and that they are financed by an international combine which is making real money out of the operations.

A Pestiferous Chain Letter

Any chain letter is a pest, but the most pestiferous to reach Boston recently is the one urging an American boycott of Japan.

Nobody knows who started it. It is obviously designed to stir up public sentiment along lines that League of Nations sympathizers here are advocating, with further purpose of influencing the Federal Government to interfere in a dispute on the other side of the world that does not concern us.

If you get one of these letters, tear it up. It means trouble, and this is no time for any American, in office or out, to monkey with the Far Eastern buzz saw.

Big Top Rialto

NEW YORK, March 2—On a stretch of Tenth avenue in the 40's, circus and carnival folk hibernate for the winter. It's the Big Top Rialto made up largely of stake drivers, wagon men, concessionaires, grifters and a sprinkling of piffawmers enjoying the seasonal loaf.

Practically all major circuses are owned today by John Ringling, who is, to circus people, "Mister Jawn." Away from the sawdust and spangles, it is a clannish crowd. They have their own lingo, code of morals and curious jealousies.

When one borrows from a member of the guild the debt is almost invariably paid. News travels with mysterious swiftness through the circus world and a welcher becomes an outcast. He may be careless about other debts but not those owed his fellows.

It is rare a domestic scandal crops out among them. A fragrant philanderer balks at becoming involved with the wife or sweetheart in the inner circle. He is restrained by his consuming love for the circus. Anything that prevents him from a full confidence is taboo.

Because of the pronounced attachment for their calling, circus folk will work for less pay than entertainers of any other sort. Of course, during season they receive free board—and excellent food, too. But their wages are astonishingly low.

Many aerialists, risking necks twice daily, are paid only $75 a week. Clowns frequently receive as little as $18 weekly with top pay $40. One of the greatest lion tamers, Clyde Beatty, enters a cage of ferocious beasts for $10 a visit and his board for a season of five months.

The highest paid performer, perhaps, was the dazzling Lillian Leitzel. Yet her salary was said to be less than $1000 a week. She was the biggest "draw" any circus ever had, and her popularity lasted 10 years, although average professional life is five years.

* * *

Alfred Cadona, daring Mexican aerialist, was the magnetic Miss Leitzel's husband. When she plunged to death in Sweden he decided to quit the circus. When it opened at the Garden he would not go near but remained in the apartment of his friend, Courtney Ryley Cooper, staring out a window, inarticulate and rolling his handkerchief into an anguished ball. At the end of the week Cooper jockeyed him into a walk past the Garden where crowds were streaming in. That night he was somersaulting in breath-taking whirls from trapeze to trapeze. A valiant trouper obeying the oldest law of the circus—"the show must go on."

* * *

H. T. Webster and the late Claire Briggs were fervent circus fans—incidentally there is a Circus Fans association numbering thousands and supporting a monthly magazine. The cartoonists toured with the circus, as guests of Dex Fellowes, several weeks yearly, from which experience they salvaged ideas for Briggs' "When a Feller Needs a Friend," and Webster's "Life's Darkest Moment."

* * *

Peggy Joyce, serene and glacial, yet invested with that strange glow of the siren, was enthroned at a ringside table at the Casina, squired by a corps of gallant cavaliers, a recent night. An inquisitive onlooker counted at other tables exactly 11 Romeos who had at one time or other been linked with the chatoyant Peggy in The Great Love.

Listen, World!
By Elsie Robinson

Jealousy

SHE NAGGED. And then she nagged, and nagged, and nagged, and nagged, and nagged.

The surprise of it! He had not dreamed she was like this. She had seemed so pearly cool; and so detached from the mean yammer and disorder of his mucky little life.

The miracle of their marriage had left him gaping. This remote, immaculate creature his wife? It could not be true. This thing could not have happened to him.

Like something leaping—that was it. Like something that had lain hidden and waiting for a long time—as indeed it had.

For this dark thing in Constance had not come with her marriage to Jim. It had come years before that; actually, with the milk from her mother's breast, drinking in that young mother's hatred of men with her first food. Fed on hate—that was how Constance had grown—with hate becoming an inevitable part of her plastic flesh and bone, part of her heart's unconscious rhythm, of her brain's involuntary response.

Like something leaping—and she herself hardly knew why it leaped. Why did she always suspect Jim? Why did she see something sinister in his every blundering act? Why was she always sure there was another woman? She loved Jim and desired him. He was the answer to years of passionate repression. She had come to him eagerly. All her hope and joy and safety was built upon him. And yet—

There was always this other thing between them. This lurking, monstrous thing that swept love aside, as an insane ape sweeps away a paper barrier, with raucous yells and chucklings.

Jealousy? Easy enough to call it that; but jealousy wasn't just a name for something—an angry mood that you could kiss away. Jealousy was a living thing. JEALOUSY WAS ANOTHER PERSON IN THE HOUSE.

But what could she do about it; or what could he? Hate had put that other person in their house—hate of a young wife feeding her baby poison from her furious breast. And there was no stopping that poison, once it had started.

A story of poison—that is the story Warren Spencer tells in his novel "FOREVER AND EVER." A big theme. He could have told it in big, booming words, making a dark, dramatic spectacle of that progressive horror; but he didn't. He did something harder. He told it in plain little words, plain little scenes, every day pictures. And because it is so common, so accustomed, you suddenly see Hate as you never saw it before.

You see Hate living—living like another person in the house—living in everybody's house, in your house and my house. You see how Hate can creep in unconsciously, bide its time, year after year, then leap at last, suddenly but inevitably, through all the decencies, wrecking all beauty and tenderness and loyalty and hope.

Read "FOREVER AND EVER."

Read it as though you were opening the book of your own heart.

YOU WILL BE.

Perhaps you can save that heart from wreckage if you read it in time.

Card Room Incident

They called the doctor to the phone
  And three of us in silence grim
Made our impatience plainly shown
  The while our bridge game stayed for him.

At last he came to us and smiled:
  "I'm sorry I must go away.
I'm called to see an ailing child,
  Get someone else my hand to play."

"Finish the game!" one friend replied,
  Another: "Make a morning call!
You know that many a tot has cried
  Who really wasn't sick at all."

"Yes," said the doctor, "maybe so,
  But worried mothers cannot wait
The truth of what is wrong to know,
  Tomorrow might be just too late."

"Well, play the game anyhow,"
  His partner muttered. "I confess
  Said he: "A child is in distress.

"They want a doctor right away,
  You want a bridge game. It shall be
As you decide. First let me say
  It's your child I've been called to see."

Jahncke and Hurley; Garner's Advice
By Claude G. Bowers

Author of "The Struggle for Democracy in America," "Founders of the Republic," "Jefferson and Democracy," "The Tragic Era" and other important works, now writing for The Boston Evening American.

THE NEW YORK EVENING POST, a robust partisan Republican paper, has already had a surfeit of one member of the Administration of Undertakers. It says:

> "If the Ohio speech of . . . Jahncke is a sample of what we are going to get in the coming campaign, may Heaven have mercy upon us. For tactlessness, for partisanship, for sheer unfairness it can hardly be matched. Is it possible to match the brutal lack of chivalry shown in hauling Woodrow Wilson out of his grave in order to blame all our present troubles 'upon his Administration?' Mr. Hoover would do well to call Mr. Jahncke off the stump."

But Mr. Jahncke is not the first of the Administration of Undertakers to deserve the rebuke. As far back as the first of January, at a meeting of the Republican National Committee in Washington, Secretary Hurley conceived and played upon the bright notion which the less clever Jahncke used in Ohio. And a mysterious "Mr. Pell," speaking to women in New York, smugly assured them that all our troubles are due to the wickedness of Mr. McAdoo, which twelve years of the undisputed sway of Mr. Mellon could not undo.

* * *

Republicans Angry Over Dry Trickery

Indeed, Secretary Hurley appears to be the worst offender of the lot. He was the inspiration of Mr. Jahncke's masterpiece which the Post appears to think is carved from cheese. And now he sallies forth again, presumably at the instance of the President, to denounce the Democratic chairman for giving voice to the common whispering around New York that Mr. Hoover is prepared to propose a referendum on prohibition—if it will do any good in the wet States of the East. Indignation! The indignation of Mr. Hurley cannot approach that of the wet Republicans in New York who were assured in 1928 through the subterranean channels of trickery that Mr. Hoover's election would mean the end of prohibition. It was part of the strategy of that noble campaign—wet in New York and Jersey; dry in dry territory.

But Secretary Hurley is not content with denouncing this latest story—he implies that the Democratic National Committee is responsible for the publications "slandering and misrepresenting the President of the United States." He knows that is not true.

* * *

Has Proper Redress From Published Attacks

It is presumed that he refers to the book, "The Strange Career of Mr. Hoover Under Two Flags," which has had a large circulation, and the later book, just out, by Mr. Liggett, formerly co-editor of Plain Talk, "The Rise of Herbert Hoover."

These books do not deal with Mr. Hoover's Presidential career. They are confined to his twenty years in Europe and deal with his business career there. They contain charges so grave that if they cannot be substantiated by proper evidence in court, the President has a clear case of criminal libel. It is inconceivable that Theodore Roosevelt would have hesitated a second in taking summary action through the courts. Few private business men of standing would permit the circulation of a book attacking their methods and activities unless court action would fail to prove a libel.

If these books are causing any concern to the Administration of Undertakers, it would be more dignified and impressive to adopt this method than to whine that the Democratic organization has anything to do with their publication; especially when the men who throw out the insinuation do not believe it.

Republican Speakers Disgust G. O. P. Paper

Perhaps the advice of Speaker Garner to the President would be worth taking. He proposes that the President call in his crooners and speakers of the Cabinet home to their neglected business, where there is more than enough to keep them occupied.

It is good advice, since the condition of the country is too serious to justify members of the Administration in neglecting their duties to make splenetic attacks upon the Democratic House which has been putting politics aside to enact legislation like the Glass-Steagall bill.

The Sacrifice Complex

Two English preachers have volunteered to parade in the No Man's Land at Shanghai and get themselves shot as a means of stopping the war. The idea is that the combatants will be so terribly impressed by the sacrifice that they will stack up arms forthwith and go home.

It is not a very bright idea. Two thousand preachers were killed in the World War, without visible results. Nor was its end hastened by the fact that a quarter million non-combatants got in the way of shot and shell.

War is big business, and is not to be deterred by a trifle like that. Here in the United States 30,000 people were killed off by automobiles last year, but nobody proposes to do away with automobiles on that account.

"God gi'e us a guid conceit o' ourselves!" said the poet Burns. Maud Royden and the Rev. Dick Shepart have their share.

They are free to try out their idea if they wish. They will learn that the value of human life in wartime is not very high. They will learn, perhaps too late, that the best way to stop war is to keep out of it.

"Pay Your Bills!"

He does not mean to cultivate the use of precise English "as she is writ." He means that familiarity with the English language should be promoted rapidly among the people who have come to us from foreign climes and who are with difficulty weaned from exclusive resort to their native languages.

He points out that English is becoming the international language. He is right. English is displacing French as the secondary language in Germany and German as the secondary language in France.

Language follows money. English has followed the eighteen thousand millions of dollars recklessly and improvidently loaned abroad. We might concentrate upon getting them to understand the meaning of "Pay your bills." They are simple English words. They can be understood by anybody who really wants to understand them.
